

WHEN MISSOURI WAS YOUNG.

The Old Legislature Used to Grant Divorces—Lotteries Were Legalized and a Plea for Reciprocity With Mexico Was Once Made.

Jefferson City, Jan. 24.—Nowhere can one find a better idea of the old Missouri than in the ancient statutes in the office of the secretary of state or the state library. Missouri is changing faster now than ever before in its history. A legislature brings men from every county together and gives a fair idea of the progress made by different sections of the state. This legislature has plenty of failings, but there are evidences that the whole state is making rapid advancement and southeast Missouri that generally has been behind shows the greatest change.

Of the old Missouri and its ways the ancient statutes tell their own story. In early years there were few divorces and the laws were strict. There seems to have been always a limited number of grounds for divorce, but the laws restricted the rights after divorce as well as before until there was much discouragement for the habit of lightly putting off responsibility. Before the civil war local and special bills were permissible. They are excluded by the constitution of 1875, but in the first half of the last century they were very common.

For example, the legislature of 1837 passed an act which declared that Elizabeth Farnella Lipscomb should be divorced from her husband, Wade Lipscomb, because he was cruel to her and drove her out of the house. The findings of fact were made by the legislature and it was provided that she should have a divorce, but it took an order of court to make it final.

Another act passed by the same assembly provided that Mrs. Francis Tucker of Platte county might marry, although her husband, who had disappeared, had not been gone seven years. Under the law of that day she had a right to consider him dead after he had been absent seven years. One year is enough now to give a wife a divorce if the husband makes no effort to provide for her. The bill does not state whether the woman appeared as a lobbyist and pleaded her own case before the legislature, neither does it tell whether the missing husband finally returned from his wanderings, nor is there any record on the subject at the capital.

As late as 1853 the legislature would stop in its labors to relieve the distress of unhappy wives, as the following act approved March 2, 1855, shows for itself:

It provided: "That Sarah Mannel, late Sarah Cudde of Cape Girardeau county, be and she is hereby authorized and entitled to institute, without delay, in the proper court, a suit for a divorce from her husband, George Mannel, who has willfully deserted her and now absconds himself from her without a reasonable cause, as though the time fixed by the statute for divorce and alimony had elapsed."

Among the bills under the head of "relief" passed during the session of 1857 was one to permit Mrs. Melaine Lebeaume to make a will. The bill recited that when Louis and Melaine Lebeaume were married both had property and they made a contract between themselves regarding its control. That contract neglected to say that the wife could make a will and dispose of her own property. As she grew older she evidently felt that the oversight was one of serious effect, and petitioned the legislature for a special act to relieve her disability.

The relation of master and servant was peculiar under the old law. Kentucky allowed "free niggers" to stay in the state, but a negro had no business in Missouri unless he had a master and was a slave. The railroads were forbidden to allow negroes to ride on their trains without the permission of their masters and were liable for twice the value of a slave if they carried him away from his home and enabled him to serve.

An act approved March 1, 1855, illustrates the feeling toward free negroes and also the readiness of the legislature to pass special acts. The act says:

"Whereas, It is represented to the general assembly that a free person of color named Rusele, now of the age of 14 years, was by the laws of Kentucky bound as an apprentice till he should arrive at the age of 21 years to one Isaac Thompson; and

"Whereas, It is further represented that since said Rusele was apprenticed to said Thompson, he, with his family, including said free person of color, has come into and settled in this state, therefore

"Be it enacted by the general assembly of the state of Missouri as follows: That said free person of color be permitted to remain in this state until he shall arrive at the age of 21 years, and no longer, any law to the contrary notwithstanding; provided, said free person of color shall continue and remain, during such time in the use and employment of said Thompson and family; and provided further that said Thompson, or some one for him, shall enter into a bond to the state * * in the sum of $1,000, conditioned that said free person of color shall be of good behavior whilst in this state and that he shall depart from and remove out of this state upon his arrival at the age of 21 years."

BARRED FROM THE STATE.

It seems odd nowadays that any person should be barred from entrance into a state, yet it took a special act of the legislature and a good bond to permit a negro boy to remain within the borders of Missouri, a free person. Had Rusele remained he would have been liable to seizure and his rights as a free man might have been forfeited if he had persisted in staying in Missouri after attaining his majority. Still, there was some good will toward negroes for a special act at another time provided that an old negro named Dick, in St. Louis, might will some property that came into his possession in some way to a son who was made a legitimate child by a special act.

Changing a name and adopting children were done through special acts of the legislature and in some sessions as many as 30 persons would get their names changed by special acts. One family of four was adopted by an old man who was required to recognize the children as his own, although until that time they had borne their mother's name only. It is to be assumed that the father accepted them, although the act plainly defines the relationship which had previously existed.

One of the odd things in the old laws was that frequently permits were granted to persons to peddle without license provided they were not to peddle clocks. A stranger might wonder why clocks were so specifically barred. For example, in 1835, Archibald Warshaw of Pike county, was granted a permit to peddle without paying a license provided he must not sell clocks or spirituous liquors. The act recited that the permit was granted because he had only one leg.

The cause for excepting clocks from the things to be peddled was not unreasonable. Somewhere between 1830 and 1835 a Yankee came along with a cargo of clocks. He and others of his kind set out to peddle. They were big six feet high. The settlers along the rivers bought them gladly and paid liberal prices for them. The clocks looked good and would run, but about the second day after the purchase the farmer would discover that his clock was not nearly so safe a recorder of time as the shadow of the loghouse on the ground. Consequently, wherever these Yankees went they filled their pockets with gold but left behind them Missourians who cursed both the Yankees and the clocks.

THE RECIPROCITY IDEA.

The early Missourians of those days had pretty fair ideas of reciprocity. The legislature of 1839 sent a memorial to Congress asking for reciprocity with Mexico, which then extended into part of what is now Colorado and a corner of Kansas. It recited that traders had begun to make trips to Santa Fe, and had found the trade profitable. If only the United States would encourage it by proper laws a great trade in "hundreds of wagons" could be built up in a few years. Doubtless that looked big at the time, and a trade that would employ hundreds of wagons must have seemed very large and important.

SECRETARY CORTELYOU, OF THE NEW DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE, AND HIS WIFE.

The new cabinet position, the department of commerce, of which George B. Cortelyou will be secretary, is now in existence by act of congress. Mr. Cortelyou is well known as the private secretary of Presidents McKinley and Roosevelt. In a few years he has risen from the position of a stenographer to that of a cabinet officer.

Lottery acts were not uncommon in the old laws. A lottery was legally established at New Franklin, near Booneville, and in 1835 an act was passed to allow the town to conduct a lottery with which to raise money to build a railroad from the town to the Missouri river. Before it was built it was not

We are very proud of the fact that doctors so generally indorse Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. There are two reasons for this: First, we send the formula to any physician upon request; and, second, the physician sees for himself that the medicine is all we claim for it.

We make no extravagant claims. We raise no false hopes.

HOW LORENZ STRAIGHTENS CHILDREN.

When he began to practise, a child who was born with the head of the femur outside of the acetabulum, or hip socket, was doomed to remain a cripple through life. There was no way of remedying the defect. Paolo Poggi was working with it in Italy. Lorenz went to it in Vienna. Almost simultaneously they developed a mode of operation—possibly Poggi having something of advantage in it—in which by cutting down into the hip, laying open the defective joint, scooping out a false socket and placing the femur in it, and then binding it in place until it had healed there, something of an improvement in the joint could be made. There were many dangers in it. Blood poisoning might follow. Suppuration often did. The child might not be able to rally from the shock. Or, more common than these, the joint became stiff, so that the patient would always be lame. But generally the child could walk after a fashion.

Five hundred times Lorenz operated by that method always trying to improve it. He wanted to do it without the knife. He thought that if the femur could be placed in the socket and held there a joint could be formed without cutting. He went to work on that hypothesis, and at last evolved the present "bloodless" method. Some idea of the importance of this step may be gained from the fact that Lorenz alone has operated by it, he says 1,000 times in Vienna.

This was the operation which was performed on the little Almour girl. It consists of kneading and tearing the muscles of the hip and thigh until they are virtually stripped from the bone. The thigh is then given a powerful downward wrench in the axis of the body, and the head thrust into the socket. Then the leg is twisted out to an angle in which it cannot escape the socket, and there it is bound in plaster bandages. For six months the child must walk with those on, every step driving the thigh bone deeper into the joint. By that time the muscles have grown into their new positions, the ligaments are strong, and the patient should be well.—John Swain in McClure's.

"To prove that I love you," wrote a Georgia swain to his sweet-heart, "I'm about to drink carbolic acid for you, as carbolic acid is the most painful of drinks."
