

It has been reported for some time that the ruling authorities in Japan are endeavoring to make Christianity the religion of the State. Of course an imperial edict cannot change the people's faith. An acceptance of Christianity principle can only come through Christian conversion. But the national adoption of the form in vogue among the most advanced nations, would be a very different thing from that which is now being made the essential feature of a change to Christianity.

The proposition is advanced from a secular standpoint. It is with a view to material and social advantages. One of the most ardent of its advocates is Mr. Fukuzawa, an eminent writer, who avows that he takes no personal interest in any religion, but considers Christianity "the creed of the most highly civilized nations." He thinks that religion is something that can be changed at will, and advises that present systems be thrown over to make way for the most advanced form. Prof. Toyama, of the Imperial University, counsels that the prevalent evils be removed for Christian ethics because the following benefits will result: First, the improvement of music; second, union of sentiment and feeling leading to harmonious co-operation; third, the furnishing of a medium of social intercourse between men and women.

The prevailing creeds in Japan are those of Shintoism, which embraces the worship of ancestors, and Buddhism. The former is the older faith, the latter not being tolerated until about the year 600. It is a polytheistic in spite of strong prejudice and established custom and became the more popular of the two. There is little spirituality about it, however, as it exists among the Japanese, consisting chiefly of conformity with the laws of nature, and the observance of a number of forms and ceremonies, and the belief in the inevitable law of retribution-elevation for right doing, debasement for wrong doing. It comprehends much metaphysical reasoning and searching into the laws of the universe, but is devoid of that spirit which gives life to religion. The ultimate object of the worshiper is the perfect rest of absorption into the divine essence, so near to the loss of individual identity that the difference to the common mind is imperceptible.

A Japanese student of western philosophy, Mr. Suprius, admits the marked lack of religious feeling and sentiment in his countrymen. The Japanese, he says, "have no taste for religion whatever, and it is impossible that they should ever become a religious people." The youth of Japan, he argues, "being free from the thralldom of creeds, and free to act according to reason, are so far in advance of Europeans, and instead of talking about adopting a foreign religion, they should go abroad and preach their religion to those who are in the thralldom of creeds, and free to act according to reason."

If the proposed religious revolution should be effected it will be chiefly for after it is the civilization of the West that attracts the promoters. But after all, is not that the great motive power in the victories claimed for modern Christianity? Where so-called "Christian" influences prevail are they not more commercial than spiritual? The pure religion of Jesus of Nazareth is very different from any of the modern systems and creeds that are called by his name, and only among a few of the millions that profess to be Christians, is there any genuine effort to live by the precepts which he proclaimed, and which are the distinctive features of the faith he came to establish.

The "spread of Christianity," as it is called, is really the spread of modern civilization, which embodies practices, customs and relations that are the very antipodes of the life of a follower of Christ and of the spirit which he breathed upon the world. So, after all, if the Japanese go over nationally to the form of Christianity without inspiration by the spirit of the gospel, they will be in the same boat as the more advanced nations, and will perhaps be very soon quite as much entitled to the appellation of Christians.

There is one advantage that accrues from the introduction of Christian civilization and the forms of so-called Christian faith. It opens the way for the true principles of the religion of Jesus the Nazarene, and renders possible the spread of those glorious truths and that vital spirit without which Christianity can exist only in name and form. It will be better than paganism, and we hope the change will be consummated.

"The Utah Mormon evil is prolific of questions. The Edmunds law provided for the confiscation of certain Mormon church property, and now that the law is being carried into effect, the question is being asked as to what shall be the proceeds of the sale of this property. A receiver was appointed several months ago and he has already in his hands the proceeds of nearly a million dollars' worth of real-estate property. The Edmunds act made no provision for the disposition of these funds. The very appropriate suggestion has been made that they be used for educational purposes, but the question at once arises how they can be so used in Utah. The school system of the State is wholly under Utah management, and to turn over this money to the Utah school fund would be very much like taking it from the Mormons only to return it to them again. The Utah problem is by no means a simple one.

There must be further action on the part of Congress, and it must be sweeping enough to cover the real authorities control of the schools. Until Utah is capable of local government on American principles, local government should be taken from her. There has been too much of half-way work with the Mormon question.

The above is from the Boston Traveler. It is similar to a number of editorials which have appeared in Eastern journals. The ideas are the same and the wording in every sentence is almost identical, showing the parrot-like process by which anti-Mormon articles are worked up for the press. We do not know where the notions therein contained originated. The Traveler cannot claim them as its own, for they appeared in other papers before the Boston editor used them and several other journals have repeated them since. But whoever gave them first to the public wrote himself down anything but a wise man.

In the first place, everybody who knows anything about the powers of the negro understands the property placed in his hands cannot be disposed of or appropriated for any purpose. It is simply held in trust for the benefit of the negro race, and the question as to its ownership is pending in the courts. The anxiety of the press, then, as to the immediate use of the funds they seem to imagine have been confiscated, is entirely thrown away. In the second place, any one who has read the act of Congress under which proceedings are being taken for the "Mormon" church property have been taken, and has common sense, knows that that act does provide for "the disposition of these funds." If, when the case is decided in the courts, it shall appear that the United States can take possession of property belonging to the Church and divert it to other uses than that for which it was donated by the members, the means so obtained are, under the law, to be used for the benefit of the district schools of this Territory.

That is not an "appropriate suggestion." It is thus provided by the same law that attempts the confiscation. So that if the proposition does look very much like "taking this money from the Mormons only to return it to them again," it is in the law and surely the Traveler would not question the wisdom of a law of Congress, for doing which it would condemn any contentions "Mormon" to the depths of "a dungeon cell."

So the Traveler would give "the federal authorities control of the schools." What else? Why not make this government paternal at once and give control of families, and labor, and religion and opinion? Simple "control of schools" would be what it calls "too much halfway work."

It would perplex the Traveler if it were required to show wherein Utah is not "capable of local self-government." So far as her people have been able to exercise it, they have demonstrated their ability to do so wisely, honestly and economically. The Traveler doesn't know anything about it. The article we have clipped from its columns shows that it is ready to do anything that may be said against Utah, without taking the trouble to learn the facts. The mode of misrepresentation is immensely more formidable, threatening and dangerous to society than anything that can be found in "Mormonism."

 A Letter from the Prophet Elijah to King Jehoram.

(Written for the DESERET NEWS by J. M. S.)

A very remarkable incident, connected with the history of the Prophet Elijah, is told in 2 Kings xvi, 1-11, one which is, perhaps, not so well known as the rest of the history of that great servant of God.

It is well known that the Prophet for several years was the terror of the idolatrous kings of Israel. Ahab, Ahab's son, and his wife Jezebel, were particularly his enemies. In the name of the Lord he rebuked them for their sins and foretold the punishment of their idolatry. Ahab particularly thirsted for the blood of the Prophet, and he sought to kill him.

One day, as the Prophet was walking in the field, he was overtaken by a chariot, and he was thrown out of the chariot and he lay on the ground for three days and three nights. He was taken up into heaven, and he was seen by King Jehoram.

On Saturday, July 28th, was celebrated in St. Paul's Cathedral the largest assembly of Christian ministers that Great Britain has ever seen. This great conference of ecclesiastical dignitaries, representing many millions of followers, was addressed by the Rev. Dr. J. H. W.

Some of his sentences were remarkable for the clearness of the doctrine, and the boldness of the language. He said that the world was in a state of confusion, and that the only way to salvation was through the blood of Christ.

Editor Deseret News:—The naval manœuvres which are at present being eagerly watched by the public, promise some really valuable results. The sham war was declared at noon on Tuesday, July 25, and since then there have been a considerable number of small operations. The general plan of the manœuvres is that the two squadrons which compose the fleet opposed to England are in safe harbors along the Irish coast—Bantry Bay and Lough Swilly—waiting an opportunity to get out and attack our ports and destroy our commerce. The two divisions of the fleet on which we depend for protection are endeavoring to blockade the enemy's ships in their harbors, and thus to solve the problem of the manœuvres to be built over the tomb of the late Emperor Frederick.

The widowed Ex-Empress is now visiting her mother, Queen Victoria, at Balmoral. It is said that she has decided to spend the winter of 1888-89 at Balmoral, and that she will remain there until the spring. The Emperor and Empress are expected to visit the United States in the autumn of 1889. The Emperor is expected to visit the United States in the autumn of 1889.

Among the social events in London during the past week, the dinner given by the Incorporated Society of Authors, of which Lord Tennyson is president, was among the most prominent. Mr. James Russell Lowell, in the course of his speech, alluded to an increase in love for Great Britain among the well-to-do in America, and inquired why stop longer and not go and see the old house, and see, more deeply its manifold effects.

In France there is much distress on account of the floods and storms during the past week. Reports are still coming in which indicate great losses through the inundations. On Wednesday, August 1, snow fell heavily on the Bavarian Alps that most of the valley—an occurrence which had not taken place in the month of August for many years.

In Paris, notwithstanding the strikes that have been in progress, the amount of attention, M. Lockroy, minister of public instruction and president of the Exposition Universelle, has devoted to the language and literature of English speaking nations. A glowing tribute was given to English and American literature, and more time was devoted to the language and literature of English speaking nations.
