A PLaid ULSTER BUILT FOR SERVICE.

The auto girl's wardrobe should include, besides the light weight garments of mohair and rubberized silk a serviceable wrap, practical for stormy and cool weather. The best of these is made of a medium weight cloaking in a plaid design of the fashionable colorings. Combinations of blue and brown, brown and tan and gray and white, or two shades of gray, are the favorites, and usually these are small plaids unobtrusive in design. The pictured coat, an all-developing garment, hangs loose from the shoulders to hem. The front is double breasted and fastens close around the neck with a high turn-over collar. Two broad stitched plaids run from the shoulder to the waist-line, then slant toward the hips, forming the setting of the inside pocket. These plaids extend in the back to the waist-line, and underneath them is run a wide stitched belt which buttons in the front and is trimmed with buttons in the back. The sleeves are full and long, finished with a turn-back cuff. There is a hood shaped so as to conform to the lines of the head in front when drawn over the collar. This is buttoned neatly under the chin. When not in use it may be detached from the garment altogether, or buttoned under the collar and left to hang free over the shoulders.

BRIGHTON NOTES.

The past week has been the most active of the season here and the hotel under Mrs. Matthews has had as many as 40 guests to accommodate at one time. The cottages are all full to overflowing and postmaster Brighton says his business is as large as ever.

The main event of the week was the big bon-fire given by Masters Truman and William Ferry "the twins," in front of Mr. Mont Perry's beautiful cottage Tuesday evening. The fire was a beautiful one, and while it blazed the guests were served with candy and peanuts by the young hosts. It was voted an immense success in every way.

Maj. Richard W. Young, John D. Spencer, Ex-Mayor Morris, H. G. Whitney and Charles Caine, who visited their families during the week returned to town.

Mrs. Anna Dinwoodey is visiting her daughter, Mrs. Florence Morris.

Mr. and Mrs. Lee Ritter are guests of Mr. and Mrs. Lee Dinwoodey.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Odell and Miss Howatt are occupying one of the cottages owned by George T. Odell.

Mrs. Dr. Worthington and Mrs. Joseph E. Caine went to town during the week. Mrs. Caine to attend the funeral of the child of her sister, Mrs. Guy Palmer.

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Fyler were guests at the Terry cottages during the week.

The cottage of Mrs. A. W. Grant which was demolished during the winter has now been re-constructed and the lady and her family are expected to occupy it on Saturday.

Mrs. Eva V. Davis and Miss Leah Parr will be guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. D. Spencer on Saturday.

Spencer Clawson was a visitor for three days at the Whitney cottage during the early part of the week.

Lillian and Helen Wells are visiting their cousin Marian Whitney.

Maj. Richard W. Young was guide and chaperon, for a tramping party which went to the Hot Pots Tuesday, enjoying a bath and remaining there all night and tramping back Wednesday. All the young people whom he escorted reported a glorious time.

In Women's World.

The woes of rich women and demands made upon them for charity are sufficiently numerous to temper their lives for their fellow-men and sufferers. Begging letters pour in by the hundreds, many of them being the most palpable impositions. Many wealthy women, whose philanthropic interests have caused them to be the victims of such sordid persecution, have politely worded refusals engraved on cards and put in stamfed envelopes already sealed, and every day dozens of these are addressed and sent out by hard-working secretaries in response to these shameless appeals for assistance.

The zoological "en-tout-cas" has been forced into the background this season, and the handless parasols is one of the summer novelties.

The correct sunshade for a morning stroll in the park is fitted with a small loop at the end of the stick, instead of the ordinary crook or knob handle. This loop passes over the hand, and the parasol is thus attached to the wrist and never released, whether the sunshade is open or closed.

"Fashion has veered round in the most extraordinary manner this year," the manager of a Regent street firm said to an "Express" representative yesterday.

"Last season the handless were very prominent. A duck's head, the size of the head bird, was quite common, and dogs, cats, pigs and rabbits were among the favored designs. This summer the demand is for fragility.

"For instance, one parasol, which will shade a society beauty at Ascot, is fitted with a tiny chain, studded with emeralds, which slips over the middle finger. This is all the handle

Bearing that in mind, people often ask me whether I think that the world will some day be possessed of a race of business women who will control the destinies of millions of money, and possibly millions of human beings. To that question I return a most unhesitating "No." My own position is one of a woman who is not a business woman, and one which is hardly likely to occur often.

Moreover, speaking as a business woman who is very happily married, I hold that a woman's life is, before all things, mentally and physically designed for the home. On the other hand, I advocate that every girl should, after her school days, begin her life by going to business, for business teaches one many things.

In the first place, it teaches a girl self-reliance, and therefore how to take care of herself. It also teaches her that she is not the only pebble on the beach—in other words, that she is not the most important person in the world—that she is merely a portion of the machine, which would go on without her, and that in consequence small personal feelings must be set on one side. Above all, it is excellent for discipline.

In saying these things I am always keeping in mind the fact that every woman should ultimately marry.

The great misfortune at the present time is that the majority of girls marry for the mere sake of being married. It is less trouble for them, even if they do not particularly care for their husbands, to be married, and place the responsibility of providing the home on someone else's shoulders rather than struggle for themselves. This is a vast mistake. Regarded in this way girls are tempted to be both unfair to themselves and unjust to the man they marry.—Pearson's Weekly.

THE WARDROBE SHOULD CONTAIN AT LEAST ONE RUBBERIZED GARMENT.

A garment which combines smartness and utility in its make-up is that of rubberized silk or satin. It is light in weight and gives ample protection from wind and rain. This coat is a three-quarters length garment of silver gray rubberized satin, lined with a gaily plaided tulle silk in blue and green. It is cut very full and has an extremely large armhole, into which is set the very full sleeve, gathered at the elbow into a little cuff which is finished with a turn-back stiffened cuff, ornamented with silk passementerie in white, gray and brown. Small white pearl buttons in brown bone rims are set very close together in a wide turn-over collar trimmed to match the cuffs. Worn with this coat is a small toque of white milan with two white mercury wings and a white chiffon automobile veil draped over the hat and in such a manner that it may be dropped in a bow in front, or thrown back over the shoulders.

W. T. Herold, Willard, Ida.; Ida I. Wray, Salt Lake.

W. H. Phillips, Salt Lake; Laura A. Fryer, Salt Lake.

Why, he is likely to take offense even when merely forbidden to enter the house without wiping his shoes or when ordered to sleep in the coal bin for a week or two so the hired girl's visitors may have the spare room. He does not, and worse than that, will not understand the exigencies of domestic life. He thinks of nothing but his own ease and comfort. I have known a man of that type to refuse, positively and brutally, to buy a $600 set of furs on the simple grounds that he needed the money to meet a payment on the house.

Such men hardly ever can be trained into being good husbands. They are impossible because they are pampered and spoiled.

I heard of one case recently in which the husband exhibited such gross evidence of the degeneracy of this class of men, pampered and spoiled, and selfish, that it should serve as a warning to all girls not to select husbands from among clubmen and ought to be right at least 10 per cent of the time. He should enter the yoke of matrimony by putting away all such foolish ideas and realize that a married man never is right except by accident.

I have a friend who has been married seven years and who never has been right but twice since the day he went to the altar. Once was when he had documentary proof that he did pay the laundry bill, although the laundry tried to charge twice, and the other time when he purchased a couple of shirtwaists and got the right size. Both of these, however, were accidents.

Some men are born barbarians, who never can be perfectly housebroken, and these kind, although they may love their wives, and strive hard to make them happy, are the ones almost certain to make a muddle of their domestic affairs. Their place is in a cave, gnawing bones.

There is another type, which is an artificial type, which believes that man has some rights in his own home. O, how many sad cases of domestic war are brought about by just such foolishness. This type is not a natural one, but is the creation of our modern artificial life.

Living in pampered ease in bachelor quarters at college, living in clubs and hotels produce matrimonial degeneracy of this type. I would solemnly warn any girl who desires a happy home against marrying one of these spoiled creatures.

She was firm about it, not angry or violent, but merely firm, and she told him that the illness should remain where they were, and that he could not have a bath tub down town. Any man with any sense would know that illness need a great deal of water, and that the bath tub is the proper place for them.

Although he growled and complained, the young husband showed signs of becoming a good and well trained husband, for he did not argue further, but took his bath tub down town for the next four days.—Hugh S. Fullerton, in Chicago Tribune.

college men. This man married one of the sweetest, prattiest girls in the world—but he did not understand matrimony. Within a few weeks after the marriage she was shocked to find that he was stubborn, perverse, and that at times he actually demanded and claimed as his right the privilege of having his own way. He twice openly objected to washing the dishes on the girl's night off. Once he attempted to meddle with the household arrangements, and without saying a word to his wife he set the dinner hour at 6:30 instead of 6:15, merely because he had to hurry home from the office to reach there in time for the earlier dinner.

His wife now has gone to her mother's, which probably will teach him a lesson which he should have learned long before he got married.

But an even worse case of masculine perversity was called to my attention recently. The husband was one of those spoiled clubmen. One day when he was out of the country and brought home two baskets of the most beautiful pond lilies.

The next morning, when he started to take a bath, he discovered the tub filled with lilies. Instead of doing as any well trained husband would have done, and going across the hallway and borrowing the neighbor's bathtub, he wanted to throw all those beautiful lilies out. His wife set her foot down hard, and showed him his proper place.

She was firm about it, not angry or violent, but merely firm, and she told him that the lilies should remain where they were, and that he could not have a bath tub down town. Any man with any sense would know that lilies need a great deal of water, and that the bath tub is the proper place for them.

Although he growled and complained, the young husband showed signs of becoming a good and well trained husband, for he did not argue further, but took his bath tub down town for the next four days.—Hugh S. Fullerton, in Chicago Tribune.

TEN YEARS IN BED.

"For ten years I was confined to my bed with disease of my kidneys," writes R. A. Gray, of P. of Oakville, Ind. "It was so severe that, I could not move part of the time. I consulted the very best medical skill available, but could get no relief until Foley's Kidney Cure was recommended to me. It has been a Godsend to me. Please send me a bottle of it. The never substitutes."
