BREVITIES.

Diamonds to the amount of $20,000,000 are owned by private persons in New York.

The wedding dress of the daughter of the Queen of Spain was all lace and pearls, and she rode to church in a tortoise shell coach.

An architect says to himself, "I have the best materials of timber, either at the time of re-setting or soon thereafter, and allow only the lateral to bear, they will bear sooner and more powerfully than if otherwise treated."

What is the chief use of bread? asked an examiner at an English school exhibition. "The chief use of bread," answered an urchin, apparently unenlightened by the simplicity of the question, "is to spread butter and molasses on."

The Boston Transcript observes: A correspondent suggests the endowment of an institution to teach the art of housekeeping. Many persons will say it is too late, as housekeeping belongs to the lost art.

There is no funeral so sad to follow as the funeral of our youth, whom we have been pampering with fond desires, ambitious hopes, and all the bright berries that hang in poisonous clusters over the path of life.

Mr. Strange, proprietor of the London Alhambra, was once a waiter in a restaurant. He now daily drives one of the handsomest equipages in London, driving with Baron Rothschild the honors of the season.

M. Philaret Charles, one of the most indefatigable searchers for historical and scientific curiosities of the present day, is said to have discovered in an ancient Italian work, published in 1638, the first idea of a magnetic telegraph. A Dutch savant had written on the possibility of establishing secret correspondence between Italy and Holland by means of two needles, one of which would be called Rome and the other the Hague. Madame de Deffond, in a letter to Abbe Barthélémy, alludes to this subject.

Old Captain S., of Nantucket, was a perfect marine philosopher, and no amount of ill luck ever dampened his faith or good spirits. Coming into the harbor once, with an empty ship, after a three years' cruise, he was boarded by a townsmen, who inquired—

"Waal, cap'n, how many bar'l's Had a good voyage?"

"No," responded the skipper, "I hadn't got a bar'l of ile aboard; but," rubbing his horny palms with satisfaction, while his hard features relaxed into a smile, "I've had a mighty good sail!"

A green one who had crossed the Atlantic, told a story of a storm, when the rain poured down in such torrents that the ocean rose six inches.

"There's no mistake," said he; "besides the captain kept a mark on the side of the vessel."

"How fortunate I am in meeting a rain-bath in this storm," said a young lady who was caught in a shower the other day, to her beau of promise who happened along with an umbrella.

"And I," said he, gallantly, "am as much rejoiced as the poor Laplander when he has caught a reader."

A lady, not long since, visiting a cemetery with her little daughter, observed on one of the tombstones neatly cut figure of a horse. Wondering why such a singular emblem should be used, they examined the inscription closely, but could find no clue to its appropriateness, when her little girl remarked, "I presume she died of the nightmare."

A remarkable old woman, resident in Paris, has just died—remarkable as a miser. She used to go to the Halles every morning, and evening and buy four cents worth of broken vegetables and rotten fruits, thus living on eight cents per day. After her death her lodgings were examined, and the sum of 37,810 francs were found between the miserable pallet where she slept!

"My dear, what shall we get for dinner to-day?" "One of your smiles," replied the husband; "I can dine on that any day." "But I can't," said the wife. "Then take this," said he, giving her a kiss, and departing for his office. He returned to dinner. "This is excellent," said he; "what did you pay for it?" "What you gave me this morning," said she. "The deuce you did?" said he; "then you shall have market money the rest of the time."

"I say, Sambo, does you know what makes de corn grow so fast when you put manure on it?" "No, I don't hardly." "Now, I'll just tell ye. When de corn begins to smell manure, it don't like de 'fumey,' so it hurries out of de ground and gets up as high as possible, so as not to breathe de bad air."

Lizzie, for these—yes, at thy command I'd tear this eternal firmament into a thousand fragments—I'd gather the stars one by one as they tumbled from the regions of spherical space and put them in my trowsers' pockets; I'd pick the sun—that Oriental god of day, that traverses the blue arch of heaven in such majestic splendor—I'd tear him from the sky and quench his bright effulgence in the fountain of my eternal love for thee!"

Lizzie—"Don't Curry, it would be so very dark."

An old gent of the "original Teutonic persuasion" entered into business conversation with an artist in marble. Says he, "Mister, I wants a doom stone for my wife vot's det, and I wants you to make him mit little angels on 'em." "All right," replies the accommodating artist, and the price was arranged. "Well, now," said he, "what you charges for one doom stone for me, as I dies soon too, and may as well git him now?" The price was fixed, and the old man turning to go, said, "Dad's all right; I gives you dat, but mind, Mister, I wants my little angels mittowers on."
