POINTING TO THE FUTURE.

The General Conference of the Young Men's Association whose sessions closed on Sunday night, was in many respects a grand occasion. Its fruits will be matured and reaped in the future. It gave evidence of a growing disposition among the young men in line with the greatest reformatory movement ever inaugurated on earth—the establishment and maintenance in the world of divine truth, to which all people are destined to conform.

This refreshing inclination was exhibited by the wide interest taken by the youth in the gathering so lately held in this city. The associations extend throughout the ramifications of the gathered portion of the Church.

Every State in which the organization has been completed was reported statistically. Twenty-six of the State associations were represented in the persons of one or more of their presidents, besides about 200 presidents of branch associations.

It was shown that much effective work had been done by the movement in enhancing the progress of the youth in a direction that is elevating and of a nature calculated to enlarge their usefulness.

Considering that this was the initiatory general gathering in connection with the young men's movement, the exercises were highly creditable. The lectures, generally speaking, were of a high order, and in point of ability would do credit to any assemblage.

As a rule they were to some extent defective in one particular. We refer to the element of modus operandi. The fields of research into which the youth should enter were, in the subjective lectures, most beautifully and ably portrayed, some of the most powerful evincing marked intellectual power.

By some the gates leading to these delightful pastures were opened, while others confined themselves almost exclusively to portrayals of their inviting and luxuriant growths.

It is, however, a gradual work to place the "doors of knowledge ajar and enable the student to easily enter the enticing precincts. It is the province of the associations not only to present proper fields of research and study, but to classify the exercises and formulate processes that will enable them readily to attain the objects of pursuit.

These two lines are distinctive, and require directions of thought that are to each peculiar. The young men's movement, in its direction, shall bend the energies of our minds? This important question was largely answered at the recent Conference. The other is: "What process shall we adopt to obtain the best results in the least practicable time, as life is short?"

That interrogation has only received a partial reply, because it is the most difficult to satisfy. It can be answered, however, but it will require concentrated thought, close observation and assiduous labor. The stimulating process will not avail. The best results in that regard cannot be achieved without bringing to the aid of thought and observation, the handmaiden of the prerequisites—experiment. The best way to demonstrate the utility of a theory is to give it an application, the result will determine its quality. If it is found impracticable it should be abandoned as worse than useless, because while it remains it is but a block in the way of a more effective process.

When theories are formulated and adhered to simply because they appear to be the best on the surface, progress is impeded. Their actual fruits constitute the test of effectiveness or inadequacy.

We would say, therefore that not only the formulating of methods, but the practical testing of them with the view to permanent adoption or rejection should be the leading consideration in connection with this great movement. A school master with a good, intelligent system and the ability to operate it will advance his pupils much more rapidly than one of greater educational attainment who works upon a less effective plan. So it is in everything pertaining to the mind.

This movement presents a glorious field of action for all who have the ability to enhance its interests. The foundation of phenomenal progress—the disposition of the young to advance in here, that the application of will progress and fit themselves for the mighty labor that confronts them is beyond question. The very inclination referred to readers that a foregone conclusion. And while the rate of speed at which they will travel will depend largely upon the persistent efforts they put forth themselves, it can be markedly affected by the aid extended them in the form of intelligent practical thought and labor of those who, being more matured, can mark out paths which they can tread with profit.

The late conference will give the movement a potential impetus. It was an occasion that will stir up the youth to the necessity of arduous to a sense of their responsibilities, that they may act like men in the mighty struggle between light and darkness.

THE ST. LOUIS CONVENTION.

Seldom if ever has a national convention assembled in country, for the purpose of nominating a president, under more favorable auspices than attend the representative Democratic body which is in session today, at St. Louis, for that object. The unanimity which has so far been manifested is positively remarkable. A hearty good nature characterizes the delegates and proceedings, and the active workers for the party, who seem to be in the great majority in the convention, evince an exuberant zeal, indicative of unbounded confidence in the result of the coming struggle.

There was no attempt at a contest over the temporary organization. Mr. White was made chairman, and Mr. Prince, secretary, and the greatest enthusiasm, when the former, in his address, mentioned the name of President Cleveland, the delegates arose en masse and cheered long and loudly, presaging his nomination by acclamation. It is predicted, and apparently on the best grounds, that the platform will be quickly framed, in a manner to win the unanimous approval of the convention. The only matter of moment concerning the action of the convention seems to be the selection of the selection of vice-president. The choice appears to lie between Gray of Indiana, and Thurman of Ohio. The latter is a grand jurist and statesman, whose long and honored career has won the admiration of two generations. He is seventy-one years old, a fact which is urged against his nomination; but if he is chosen the Republicans will have to make John Sherman their leader, or run an imminent risk of losing Ohio, which would be fatal to them. From this distance the chances appear to be in favor of the nomination of Judge Thurman for second place.

CHICAGO LETTER.

Chicago, May 30, 1888.

Julius Talks Pungently of Politics. Poor Billy Onahan, Mayor Roche's Jesuit city collector, is the maddest man in Chicago today.
