THE RAMSEY CONCERT.

Large Audience Greets Fair Singer Suit for Divorce.

Special Correspondence. Provo, Utah Co., Nov. 13,-In spite Provo, Utah Co., Nov. 13.—In spite of wind and rain a large audience came out to the concert given in the taternacle last evening by Miss Emma Ramsey, assisted by the tabernacle choir, Miss Jennie Sands, Willard Weihe and Spencer Clawson, Jr. Each number was received with most enthusiastic evidence of appreciation by the audience. Miss Ramsey and Mr. Weihe generously responded to encores with familiar pieces, "The Last Rose of Summer," by Miss Ramsey, and "The Swanee River," by Mr. Weihe, thus given were particularly appreciated.

ed.

Miss Ramsey's beautiful cultivated voice has so often been praised by competent musical critics, and the subtle charm of her dainty, unaffected personality before an audience can not be sonality before an audience can not be described any more than can the sweet odor of flowers. No criticism will, therefore, be attempted by the "News" Provo dramatic and lyric critic, but he will express the opinion that the kind of greediness that takes the form of "encore" in public entertainment is not sufficiently disguised. The vigorous applause that brings a favorite performer back for additional—and free, because not on the program, and, therefore, not in the contract—effort. therefore, not in the contract—effort, stops too promptly, after the artist makes his responsive appearance, to be mistaken for an expression of apprecia-tion. It is at least liable to raise a doubt as to whether the reason for all doubt as to whether the reason for all the fuss is not a desire to obtain more from him than was paid for. Now, if the applause were kept up for a short time after he entered, or indicated a willingness to "throw in" a few extra numbers, he would have the pleasure of thinking that that was an audience not actuated solely by a desire to drive a good bargain, which would only be a fair return for his generosity. But of course this is all outside of the case. The following splendid program was rendered at the concert, and the good wishes of the audience will go with Mis Ramsey on her contemplated trip and all hope and expect her to return with the laurels her contemplated trip lith all tope and expect her to return with the laurels she so well deserves. The other artists, who appeared with her will also be kindly remembered and always welcome; this includes the tabernacle choir, which, fortunately, we have always with his ways with us.

FALL WORK FOR FRUIT GROWERS

Never put off spring work that might be done in the fall, particularly as regards planting hardy trees, vines or plants. Spring is always too short for the labor it brings, even when not wet and late, says American Cultiva-tor.

Plow in the fall all heavy loamy land that you intend to plant in the spring.
This exposes it to the action of frost, and if done late, tends to destroy insects and their larvae. Do not plow sand in the fall unless there is sod, stubble, etc., upon it, that is to decay.

Topdress very light land with an inch or two of clay or heavy loam in November, and let the winter frosts and rains blend the two diverse soils to their mutual advantage. Harrowing in fartilizers on light ground is better than fertilizers on light ground is better than plowing them in.
In the fall topdress all the small fruits with compost, bone dust or other fertilizers, that have staying powers, spread it along close to the rows and over the roots, and work it into the soil lightly by cultivation. This gives erything a vigorous start in If possible, take out before winter all perennial weeds, sorrel, white clover, etc., but do not greatly disturb the roots of strawkberries just on the ap-roach of winter. In most localities and soils, raspber ries, currants, gooseberries and black berries do better if planted any time af ter they drop their follage in the fall. Such planting can be continued even into the winter, on mild days when frost is neither in the air nor soil. Frozen earth should never come in contact with roots. I plant strawberries all through the autumn area in The tact with roots. I plant strawberries all through the autumn, even in December, and before the ground freezes hoe upon them one or two inches of soil, raking it off as soon as freezing weather is over in the spring.

In handling plants at any time never let the little rootlets dry and shrivel. Keep them from sun, frost and wind. If the roots of plants received in boxes are frozen, let them thay out in a celare frozen, let them thaw out in a cel-lar undisturbed. If roots are black, shriveled or dusty from transportation, wash them in clean water, and in the case of strawberries, shorten them onethird and place at once in moist soil.
