The Insect Bugs.

From the Iowa experiment station comes a bulletin on fighting insect bugs. In this it is advised as a means of prevention to destroy all old rubbish, straw, manure, etc. When the bugs appear in limited areas, apply kerosene emulsion in sufficient quantities to saturate all legs and young larvæ. If large areas are affected, plow under the crop and seed the field immediately. Some crops, such as wheat or barley, may be planted quite early, and bugs which infest on these early sown grains may be killed by plowing under, or some similar process. Blighted may be prevented by setting such a crop of wheat or barley a little before maturity, removing the crop and burning the stubble as soon as it is dry. Dusty furrows must be used when other means are not practicable. Plow a strip a few yards wide, and thoroughly pulverize this with a harrow. Then in this strip make two or three deep furrows, or a series of shallow ones, with sloping, dusty sides.

The white fringe, or chinch bug insect, proved very partially successful last year, and it cannot be relied upon to check this year to the inclusion of other well known measures, which shall be diligently applied whenever necessary.

Remedies for Cabbage Worms.

Kerosene emulsion, pyrethrum and sulphate are all good, and hot water at a temperature of 120 degrees applied over the heads with a common watering can is probably as effective as anything. Whichever remedy is employed, however, the applications must be repeated so long as any worms remain. Pure good although a trial for them, which are rather several thicknesses of leaves are difficult to reach.
