

DOWN TO THE CROSSROADS

You can talk about yer Congressmen, An' Senators and such, Debating 'down t' Washin'tun In a way to beat the Dutch; Their arms wild in the air, And stampin' on th' floor— But the place where things gits settled Is Down to the Crossroads store.

We gather there 'most every night When all the work is through, An' sorter glance the country o'er, An' a bird's-eye view Of politics, diplomacy, Religion, crops, and soar To patriotic heights—ye bet!— Down to the Crossroads store.

Sometimes our arguments grow hot, An' Deekin Brown rips out A good old cuss-word, like "Gad darn! What hully-aboots an' a cussin'! Then Granpop White jumps from his chair An' grabs an ole axe-helve. "By gum!" he squeaks, "that's what we done "Way back in Eighteen-twelve!"

You can believe the eagle screams, An' cannons crash an' roar, When we're settin' mighty questions Down to the Crossroads store. —Henry Edward Road, in Harper's Magazine.

NOTES.

A book written out of the heart usually reaches the heart. Charles Wagner's latest book, "The Better Way," seems invariably to have found its own, and to have delivered its message. Both Mr. Wagner and the publishers of the book are constantly receiving letters from grief-stricken parents who have lost children, declaring their gratitude for the comfort they have received from "The Better Way," and asking if Mr. Wagner wrote the charming gospel of fatherhood that prefaces it from personal experience. It was indeed out of sad personal experience that Mr. Wagner wrote. His first-born was a boy—Pierrot—who brought untold joy to the youthful father. Great was the young parent's pride in his firstling, and as the years slipped by the two grew wonderfully together. The father looked forward to having his son as companion in his work, and the boy was just growing to an age when this was beginning to be planned, when sickness came. As the illness progressed the father's anguish increased—when death seemed probable, the father was distracted. In his efforts to calm himself during his hours of watching by the boy's bedside, the father wrote down the comforting thoughts that now form the first chapters of "The Better Way." When the boy died, the father continued the book, intending it to be a tribute, a monument to the memory of his beloved son.

Maurice Maeterlinck's great play, "Monna Vanna," produced in London and condemned by the censor—many most absurdly—was at last published by the Harp in Sept. 11. The translator is Alexis Irene du Pont Coleman, of the College of the City of New York. In a recent description of the play, the Harp has called it one of those marvellous Flemings "seated at the bounteous tables painted by Jordaens in his Dutch interiors." But this it seems to be an outside view. "There is an indefinable gravity, deliberation, and reflectiveness about him. His eyes remain for long fixed and attentive; his speech is hesitant, as if he were hesitating to utter not entire confidence in it, but prefer another, more docile and patient interpreter—the pen."

More than 3,000 copies of Jack London's novel, "The Call of the Wild," were sold on Wednesday of last week, and the book is now in its thirty-fifth thousand. The first English edition was sold out on the day of publication.

The first full book on the list of Harper & Brothers is Robert W. Chambers' new love story, "The Maid of Paradise," published in September. In this novel Mr. Chambers has abandoned colonial America, which lives so vividly in his "Cardigan" and "The Maid of Arden," and has transferred his scenes to France. A young French countess and an adventurous American play the parts of heroine and hero. The American, while serving in the French Imperial Military police, falls upon a work of plots and counterplots, in the tale of which he is surprised to find a beautiful young Frenchwoman, who has become involved in pressing dangers by her own ignorance of life. Mr. Chambers carries the reader from the idyllic village of Paradise to the most exciting scenes of the Franco-Prussian war, in which his lovers and other characters of his story are intimately involved.

Margaret Sutton Briscoe's new volume of love stories, "The Change of Heart," is just off the presses of Harper & Brothers. Mrs. Briscoe Hopkins is well known as the author of "Jinty" and "The Sixth Sense," both books having aroused unusually favorable and interesting comment at the time of publication. Their author began her literary career in a quite accidental manner. She had at that time a studio in Baltimore, where she worked, with much success, as an illuminator on vellum. One day, on her return from a few days' rest at an old back-country farmhouse, she desired to go down, for her own benefit, a story told her by the farmer. She began in the evening, and wrote and wrote, not heeding the time, until she penned the final word she put out her lamp in broad daylight. The result was the story "How the Spirit Moved Cynthia," which was soon printed in a magazine. From this moment she realized that she had found her vocation.

It is announced that Miss Cecilia Loftus will appear in Justin Huntly McCarthy's dramatic version of his novel "The Proud Prince," which Harper & Brothers have just published. It will be remembered that Miss Loftus is the former wife of Mr. McCarthy. She is famous as the young woman who rose from the vaudeville stage to be queen of leading woman for Sir Henry Irving.

The new life of Tolstoy, which is being written by Edward A. Steiner, and which will be published this fall by the Outlook company, is to be illustrated with reproductions of paintings specially made for it by Pasternak, the brilliant Russian artist, who is a personal friend of Tolstoy.

The October number of the Strand Magazine will contain the first of the pages in which Conan Doyle revives Sherlock Holmes. It seems that the great detective was not killed in that last scene in the Alps. His inventor is going to tell what he did when he fell, and what he has done since.

Onoto Watanabe's new Japanese love story was a long time in the naming, title after title having been chosen and rejected. Finally "The Heart of Hyacinth" was selected, chiefly for euphony and a suggestion of dainty sentiment, for the story is similar to the same author's A Japanese Nightingale in the predominance of the latter characteristic. The heroine is a young girl, born in Japan, who grows into young womanhood in the course of the story, and whose romance is quaintly developed by new and unusual means. The mystery surrounding the birth of Hyacinth makes her unique among Japanese heroines. Miss Watanabe has passed the summer at Fordham Heights, New York. She is wholly occupied at present in studying Klaw & Erlanger's rehearsal for the production of her A Japanese Nightingale on the stage this fall.

Miss Marie Manning, author of Lord Allingham, Bankrupt, had an unusual experience the other day at Woodstock, in the Catskills, where she has been spending the summer at work on her new novel, Judith of the Plains. She had been writing with intense concentration on the final pages, and had in-

THE LATE CARL ROSA.

This is a picture of a famous operatic conductor, husband of the still more famous singer, Parepa Rosa, both of whom have long since passed away. They filled an engagement at the Salt Lake Theater in the middle '80's, before we were connected with the outside world by rail. Mr. Rosa presented his picture to Hon. John T. Caine at that time and this cut is made from the photograph now in his possession. After the death of his wife, Mr. Rosa continued at the head of a grand opera company in England for many years, and gained a very high reputation.

ashed it with the sensation of relief very natural at the end of many months at work, when there was a cry of alarm outside, and she looked out to behold the adjoining cottage in flames. She spent the remainder of the day in passing buckets of water to the men who were fighting the fire, and when it was finally conquered, went to bed very happy. She considered the experience a beautiful one after her mental absorption in Judith, but possibly not many authors, masculine or feminine will agree with her.

There will be an article by Olive Schreiner in a book which Fisher Unwin of London will publish before long. The author of it, Frederick Pinchay, is her nephew, and she has assisted him generally with the volume. In it he recounts his experiences as a sportsman in Portuguese Southeast Africa, and in the almost unknown hunting grounds of Zululand. There he found hippopotami and other big game which gave him adventures enough. His book will be illustrated.

BOOKS.

The story of how a shipload of French money, intended for Philadelphia, was landed at Boston and was then carried to the city on the British lines to the city on the Delaware, is told for the first time in Dr. Oberholzer's biography of "Robert Morris." The money was intended to provide specie to start the bank of the United States during revolutionary times. The tale has been hitherto a sealed chapter in revolutionary history, and so has been the account of Morris' successful efforts a little earlier to borrow money from Rochambeau to pay the ragged Continental troops. Without this money Washington could not have taken the northern route to Yorktown. Many historical episodes which were of vital moment to the country then, and which are of keen interest to us today, are said to be related for the first time in this volume. "Robert Morris: Patriot and Financier" is written largely from new materials, including 16 manuscript volumes by Morris himself. The Macmillan company announce the book for immediate publication.

Miss Caroline Brown, the author of "Knights in Rustling," has written what is said to be a vivacious story of Indiana in the closing years of the

ABOUT THAT COAT

You wear a coat. Why? To keep the cold out? No; to keep the warmth in. What of the body that has no warmth—the thin, poor body that lacks the healthy flesh and fat it needs?

For such we say that Scott's Emulsion provides the right kind of a coat. Why? Because Scott's Emulsion builds firm, solid flesh and supplies just enough fat to fill nature's requirements—no more. That means bodily warmth.

revolutionary war. The book takes its title, "On the We-a Trail," from a famous old war trail which centered at one of the important forts on the Wash near the modern town of Lafayette. An important feature in the central incidents is the capture and recapture of Fort Sackville at Vincennes on the Wabash. The hero and heroine have many adventures in the wilderness, and are finally united at this fort when it falls under the assault of George Rogers Clark. Most of the hero's adventures take place on the famous We-a Trail. The Macmillan MAGAZINES.

The October Century will bring the final of Richard White's latest novel, "The Yellow Van." What this student of English social conditions believes to be the solution of the vexed problems painted in black in the earlier chapters of "The Yellow Van," is promised in these closing chapters. Book publication of "The Yellow Van" is announced for October. Following recent description and discussion of the taking of the census in America, and some noteworthy results of the twelfth census, the Hon. W. R. Merriam contributes to the Century an article on "The Census in Foreign Countries." The director of our last census will show that the scope of the census in foreign countries is less comprehensive than in the United States, and will point out the differences in methods of enumeration, the relative cost of taking census, and the crude methods used in the Orient. L. O. Howard will tell in full of the war waged on "Yellow Fever and Mosquitoes," by Drs. Juan Gutierrez, Carlos Finlay, Jesse W. Lazear, James Carroll, John R. Kissinger, Major Walter Reed, and other heroes. The work of these brave men seems to have proved conclusively that the yellow-fever mosquito is responsible for the spread of this plague; and the practical extermination of these pests has begun. Dr. James Carroll, whose picture will be among the illustrations of the article, is the only surviving American member of the Army Yellow Fever Commission.

The favorite household magazine Good Housekeeping, has outdone itself in the enlarged and improved issue which appears for October. Not only the number of pages increased, but the typography is new and the illustrations and decorations far surpass those of preceding issues. The new issue, for instance, with a tribute to California Girls, by Charles F. Lummis, illustrated with many beautiful portraits printed in a tint that there are pictures of handsome, healthy-looking young men in the same rich manner. A signature of sixteen pages on tinted paper contains an article, "In the Homes of Japan," by Florence Peller, accompanied by charming drawings by Mr. Yeto, a Japanese artist, also a richly illustrated article on "The Influence of Arts and Crafts by Madeline Yale Wynne. Other notable features of this issue, which is as practical as it is handsome, are an eloquent tribute to "The Schoolmarm," by Jacob A. Rias; "The Daily Newspaper and the Family," by Charles Emory Smith; "Experiments upon Children," by President G. Stanley Hall of Clark university; a finely illustrated article on "Headaches," a rhymed and illustrated treat "To the East," by Oliver Herford; a fascinating letter from London by Linda Hull Larned; a new department, "Homelike Rooms," and the usual array of good cookery.—The Phillips Publishing Co., Springfield, Mass., New York, Chicago.

'TIS NOT OUR NAME THAT MAKES OUR GOODS RELIABLE, BUT OUR GOODS THAT MAKE OUR NAME RELIABLE.

Our new store has now been open to the public one week. It has pleased most people and we have received a proper proportion of compliments and congratulations on its beauty and practicability.

As predicted by us, the people feel a personal pride in our establishment, and this alone assures a still greater success for our future.

For astore to best serve its patrons it must be financially a success to its owners, and to be this it must have the most valued of all assets—the confidence of the people.

It is our purpose to convince all the people that Leyson's is a jewelry store built for the masses, in which every individual taste and fancy is considered in making our selections of stock, and every right of the purchaser is recognized.

We sell goods at one price to all and mark every article in plain figures, thus dealing justice to every buyer and establishing a like purchasing power for every man's dollar.

The most elegantly furnished stores in our country are the great stores—made great because of low prices making it possible to sell great quantities of goods, while competitors are satisfied with few sales at big profits and a mediocre reputation.

We are not mediocre—we copy successful merchants, and will be second to none in giving our patrons goods in sufficient quantities to enable us to buy and sell the lowest.

On Monday, October 5th, we will sell a quantity of handsome Sterling Silver Deposit Perfume Bottles at, each

$1.25

These bottles are handsomely decorated with sterling silver filigree work on white crystal and sell elsewhere at $2.
We invite visitors to our store at all times—it will interest them.
