"By grafting in the nursery, or be-fore the native tree has had time to produce its own system of roots by its own rapid-growing, fearly top, you have gained little or nothing over planting trees on their own roots, for the foll-age of any tree governs the size, ex-tent and form of the root system; take heed, as these are facts, not fancies, and are not to be neglected if you would have a walnut grove on a safe foundation." foundation." Mr. Burbank is considered to be very good authority on this subject, I have therefore taken the liberty of quoting

SOME UTAH TREES. I have found walnuts growing in various parts of the state, both black and English, but little attention has been paid to them. Much of the infor-mation I have gathered in regard to this matter was very encouraging. For instance in the orchard of John Graf of Santa Clara, Washington county, Utah, I found several walnut trees, one in particular had made good growth being 25 or 30 feet high. I heard that these trees had grown from nuts planted 18 years ago. The largest tree had been bearing several years. In 1904 about 50 pounds were produced and in 1905 from 50 to 100 pounds; in 1606 more than 156 pounds were gathered. The smaller trees had some good nuty on, but the quantify was not in pro-portion to the larger trees. The nuts from the larger trees were excellent. I portion to the larger trees. The nuts from the larger trees were excellent. I cured some 30 pounds which will be found on exhibition at the board's ex-hibit in the chamber of commerce, Salt Lake City, Mr. Graf said further that he sold his walnuts at 16 cents per pound, and that one tree brought him at least 35 dollars, for the croy of 1906.
