

TODAY ALL ROADS LEAD TO THE FAIR

Perfect Day Marks the Opening of the Inland Empire Exposition Which is Bigger, Brighter and Better Than Ever—Splendid Display of Products of Factory, Field, Forge, Quarry, Mine and Farm.

With more pomp and ceremony than has heretofore marked the opening of the state fairs in Utah, the Inland Empire exposition was formally opened this afternoon by the people of Utah this afternoon. President J. G. McDonald of the fair association headed the long procession which marched into the manufacturers' building and was the first speaker. With him in the line of march were the following: Governor Spry and Col. Bath and Keesler and Gen. Wedgewood of his staff; President Joseph F. Smith, President A. H. Lund, President John H. Winder, Chief Barlow, the Rev. P. A. Simpson, many senators and representatives from the last legislature, N. E. Barton, Mrs. P. J. Ritter, W. F. Armstrong, C. A. Hickerson, William C. Winder, F. J. Hewlett, Emma Ensign, Thomas H. Smith, J. H. Seely, A. B. Carstensen, all of the fair board, Secy. H. S. Ensign and others. Arriving at the balcony, Held's band played a rousing patriotic air and Presto, McDonald opened the fair with a short address, well expressed his pleasure in being able to formally open the great exposition that Utah has ever had and did a tribute to those who had made it possible. He regretted that each county in the state did not have an exhibit there, but said that he hoped the county commissioners in every county would make such action and each county will in the future have its own building on the grounds and that the governors would name special fair commissioners from each county to represent their counties and departments that are exhibits. He introduced Governor Spry who said in part:

"It affords me a great deal of pleasure to open the Inland Empire exposition, and I desire to congratulate President McDonald and the other officers of the association for the manner in which they have planned this success. I especially thank the people, too, for having energetic wide-awake and public spirited men and women in this association capable of placing before you such a fine exposition. There has been a great advance in manufacturing and all possible encouragement should be given to outside capital to come in here and open up new factories and develop the resources of the state."

"I hope we will be able to interest capital in our iron and coal and I hope in the not far distant future to see a great iron works started here to develop the great stores of mineral we have in this state. It is my prayer to the people of Utah that they will lay aside their petty differences and get together, putting their shoulders to the wheel of commercial progress for the development of the state and the good of all. President Taft declares that Utah has the finest cattle in the world and this is so because the people of Utah are buying in the principal markets of the world and breeding only the best."

Gov. Spry referred to the remarkable success of Utah exhibitors at the A. Y. P. exposition at Seattle and then formally accepted the keys to the exposition and bid all the people of Utah enjoy it. President John H. Winder spoke briefly saying that it was years ago the same state fair in Utah that was held on the site of the Utah hotel and that since that day continual progress has marked each succeeding exposition. He expressed his pleasure in having attended every state fair since that time and in having his own exhibits there. He said that he had made it incumbent upon each of his sons to perpetuate his name on the rolls of the State Fair association.

A selection by the band closed the formal exercises, and the crowds began to surge back and forth in a great mass of happy humanity in the full enjoyment of the great exposition.

BIG CROWD PRESENT.

With an enormous crowd in attendance, the great Inland Empire exposition was formally opened this afternoon, at 1 o'clock, by Governor William Spry.

The numerous buildings presented a scene of preparedness unusual for the first day of such a gigantic affair, and over all the exhibition hall was draped in its proper place.

It is unquestionably the biggest and most state fair ever held in the history of Utah, and probably will be remembered as the most impressive effort ever made by any western state to show all of its resources by the visible proofs in the innumerable products of factory, field, forge, quarry, mine and farm.

The gates were opened to the public at 10 o'clock this morning, and from that time thousands of visitors poured into the spacious grounds and made long rounds of the exhibition buildings.

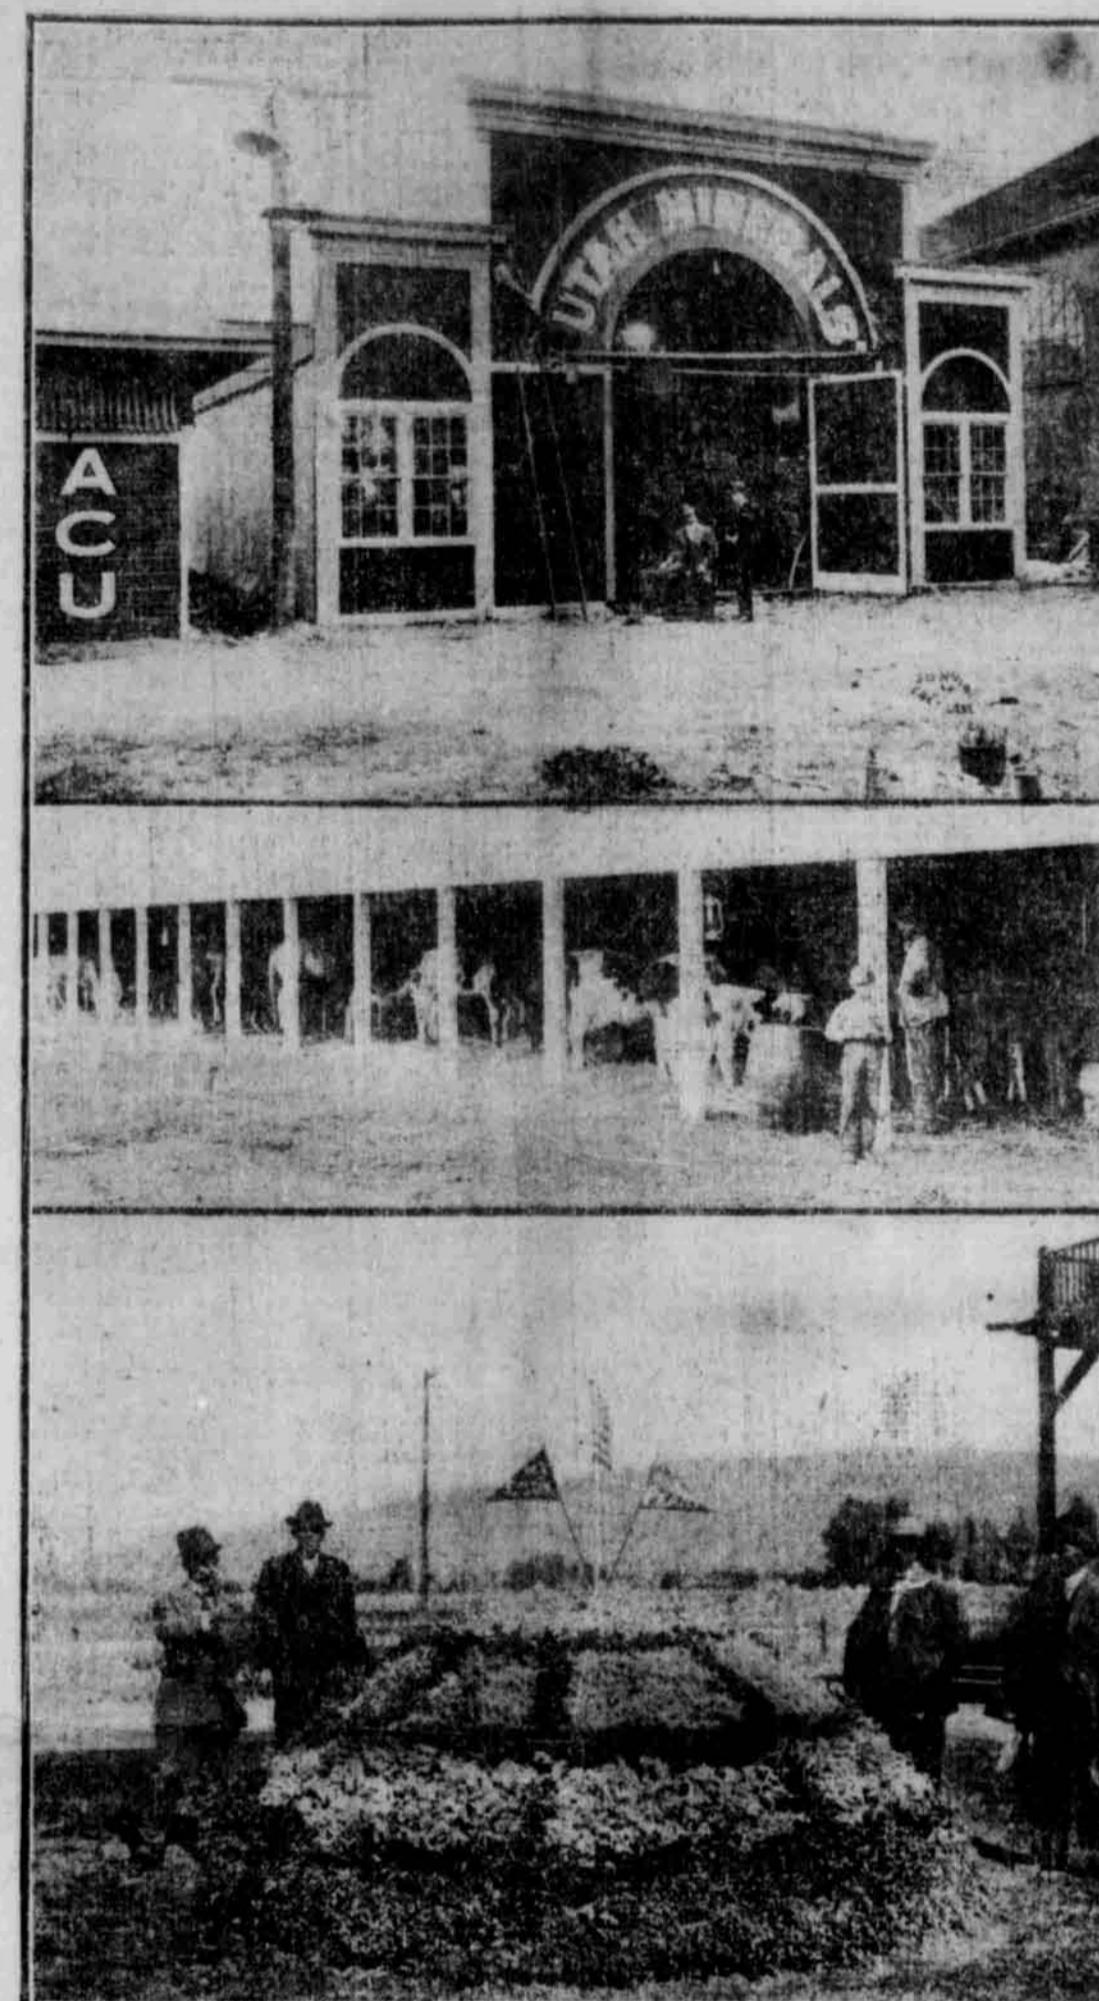

The conditions were auspicious for a state fair opening. Weather Wizard Thiesen evidently did his best to make things comfortable. Although the fair officials had been anxiously watching the sun in the eastern skies, fearing that the rain which had been falling at fitful intervals on a sultry night and Sunday might continue, the early opening exercises, their dark anticipations were dispelled. When the sun pushed back the curtain of the night from the purple mists of the Wasatch range, the morning broke beautiful and balmy unclouded, a few wisps of fleecy clouds, like a perfect day for fall weather. The air was just crisp enough with the changing chill of autumn to send the cool racing through one's veins, and with great crowds fairly danced with glee.

FORMAL OPENING.

The fair officials and invited guests gathered at the president's and director's headquarters at 1 o'clock, when the formal opening exercises were held. Held's band gave several selections. The Rev. F. J. Short delivered the invocation. J. G. McDonald presided over the Utah State Fair association during the opening address, and turned the keys of the exposition over to Governor Spry, who made the principal address of the occasion and officially declared the fair open. Two or three short addresses were then delivered by prominent citizens, and the exercises at the headquarters were concluded.

The guests were then taken by the directors of the fair association around the grounds on an extended tour of inspection. The course included Government and state, the state offices, the state supreme court, state legislators, Mayor John S. Brundage, all of the city officers, and the ministers and clergymen in Salt Lake City.

Individuals and collectively, these prominent men pronounced the exposition to be the largest, most varied, most interesting and most complete

SCENES AT THE STATE FAIR.

Top—Harry S. Joseph spent Sunday on the Fair grounds getting the mineral exhibit ready.
Middle—A few Holsteins taking a light lunch.
Bottom—President James G. McDonald, Claude Russell and Ed McLelland "discovering" the north pole at the Inland Empire Exposition.

account of the unprecedented number received for each race.

The race lover will find a lot of class in the races to come this week. The two principal features of the racing will be the Utah State fair handicap, Tuesday, and the Inland Empire exposition, Saturday. Ten horses are entered for each event, and the purse is $500.

HORTICULTURAL BEEHIVE.

Another perfect specimen of the master gardener's art is a huge bushy compound of several thousand "hen-and-chicks" plants, which stands directly before the main entrance to the fair grounds. It was made by Mathew Byhower, gardener at Liberty park.

One of the interesting sights at the fair is the large exhibit of the Utah national guard, which is the first of its kind ever presented for public exhibition in this state. It includes all of the guns and equipment of the guard and occupies a separate building across the avenue from the art gallery.

ARTISTIC PHOTOGRAPHY.

A real artist in photography is Alvy T. Thompson, Shreve, who shows a rare collection of his own original designs, including artistic original designs in book covers and art crafts work, wood carvings, portrait busts in plaster and bronze, steel and copper engravings, two cabinets of beautiful hand-painted china, a cabinet of art crafts work from the L. D. S. university, hand-woven and hammered copper and bronze work.

The boys of the state industrial school at Ogden are quite proud of their fine band, numbering 40 pieces, which quartered during fair week in the city.

Utah manufacturers are trying to never before in their exhibits, and they are impeded to their greatest efforts by the offer of a handsome silver loving cup trophy which has been put up for the person who makes the finest individual exhibit of his own products.

The mineral and gem exhibit is especially interesting. The minerals and samples are classified and set apart in different compartments. The most extensive exhibits are from the Park City district.

BRILLIANT ILLUMINATIONS.

To paraphrase CY Warman, it's day all day in the daytime, and there is no night in the fair grounds. More than 7,000 incandescents and 225 are lights radiantly illuminate every nook and cranny, not only in the buildings but all over the grounds. The race track is the strongest, located at night that one may read a newspaper at almost any place around the big circle of blazing globes. On a small platform reaching 30 feet above the ground and just directly above the grand stand, the judges are seated in a high-backed chair, the judges search-light ever bringing the racing horses will be followed at night, so that every movement can be clearly seen by the crowd in the stand and beside the track.

SPEEDY HORSES.

The speed department of the fair consists of horse races in the stalls this week, from Oct. 4 to 8, including the Buena Vista races will be postponed, and the running races on the Buena Vista cards will be transferred to the fair grounds. The judges of the Club Jockey Association and officials of the state fair races during fair week, headed by Judge Pomroy.

Secretary Horace Ensign stated that every racing event has been filled to the limit, and that it has been found necessary to shut out late entries on

The poultry show is the finest exhibition of its kind ever seen at a state fair. Utah's best birds are on display, and the prettiest pens in the big new poultry house are the best ever used in such a show in the west. The exhibits represent the cream of the poultry business in Utah, with amounts to more than $1,250,000 in investments over the state.

LEO FAIRBANKS WITH FINE APPRECIATION AND CAREFUL HANDLING. One of his best pictures is the view looking into America Park, with the mountains in the summit, and another beautiful scene is Lake Phoebe, with Wolverine peak in the background. The esthetic will draw memorials of days of joy from his painting of Fisher Harris' cabin in Big Cottonwood canyon, surrounded by quaking aspens, a most beautiful scene. The contrast is felt in "The North Pole Mary," another big Cottonwood scene, in which the pine trees cast their deep shadows down the green slope of a gentle hill, and the grass is spotted with bright red Indian paint brush flowers. J. Leo Fairbanks also has a fine portrait study of his father, J. B. Fairbanks, who sits reading a book.

ARTISTIC PHOTOGRAPHY.

A real artist in photography is Edward Hill's "Massachusetts Coast Near Plymouth" and his forest scenes of which there are four.

"The Chase" by J. T. Harwood is in keeping with it. It shows a furrowed field, a tired ploughman weary ploughing after two oxen, and a deadly pale sunset over the dark forest in the background. Harwood strikes an odd color note in his reds and black shadows, in "The spinning song," showing a girl in Puritan costume sitting with hands folded in her lap, beside a great spinning wheel while the fire-light from an unseen fireplace on the right throws her figure and face out of the darkness of the room. A painting of different tones is Harwood's "Linen Park" landscape, gay in the white light and gentle, young girls.

Edward Bergengard has several gripping paintings in modern impressionist style, presenting scenes from western life, including the somberness of the desert, the struggle of pioneers and hinder subjects. His "Rock Pictures" are "Digger Day" in Winter, "Autumn Day" and "Milkings." He also shows several good colored "yarn" sketches.

PAIRBANKS AT HIS BEST.

One of the most fascinating paintings in the exhibit is "November" by J. B. Fairbanks, showing a fog on the ocean, the sun breaking through heavy clouds, a peculiar glow shining on the waves, making an impression of gray through out, that is set off by orange. J. B. Fairbanks also exhibits several other canvases which he painted while in the south about six months ago. His "Coast of Santa Maria," showing a fog on the water, and a black cliff far away falling sheer into the waves, is a fisherman's boat in the right foreground, is a striking picture of variety.

He finely handles the delicate art of depicting the subtle and fall of the waters around the rock. The reflection of the sun's rays over the lake is superb. Mr. Fairbanks also exhibits three small water colors of unusual cleverness.

GEM OF COLLECTION.

The crowning painting of the whole collection is "New England Forest in Winter" by F. J. Girardin. One can almost hear the soughing of the wind through the trees in looking on this picture, and it gives one a distinct shiver. This Girardin is a true artist, although he is not a student of nature, and her works. Other paintings hung in the exhibit by Girardin which deserve special study are two autumn scenes and three forest brooks.

There is a fine melancholy sweetness in a winter forest scene by Edward Hill, brother of Thomas Hill, who painted the famous "Driving the Last Leaves" which was shown at the last exhibition.

FAIRBANKS'S ARTS.

Leo Fairbanks has a few exquisite original designs in book covers, art crafts work, an altar piece, and several studies of women in the nude.

A thing worth study is the wood carving of hunters and dragons by T. M. Adams.

Mary Teasdell has some good paintings including yellow roses in a bowl, an apple tree in spring, and portrait of an old woman.

Mrs. Marie G. Hughes shows a number of beautiful pictures, including a spray of pink roses and another of peacock feathers.

J. V. Browning shows several water-colors of unusual merit, including a red sunset with a boy driving three cows in the farm sheds; "Moonlight on a Mountain Brook"; "Children in the Garden."

Among the best still life and water-color studies are those by Mrs. E. F. Barrett of Provo, including "Chinese

SECOND DAY OF L. D. S. CONFERENCE

Tabernacle Well Filled at Third Session—General Authorities and Prominent Visitors Occupy Places on the Stand—Addresses Are Replete With Good Advice—Strong Testimonies of the Truth of the Gospel.

The second day of conference was marked by a beautiful weather, the rain storm last night ending with clear skies and cool, bracing air which proved in spring to the large crowd that attended the third session of conference in the tabernacle this morning.

Ten o'clock found a number of seats vacant in the tabernacle, but when the opening hymn was announced ten minutes later, many of them were taken and a large congregation was present the body of the tabernacle and gallery being well filled.

The general authorities of the Church were all present in their places excepting Elder C. W. Penrose of the council of twelve, who is presiding over the British mission, and a large representation of prominent men and women from outside states were grouped in chairs in front of the stand.

The opening hymn, "Praise to the Lord, the God of angels," was sung by the choir and congregation.

Prayer was offered by Elder Benjamin Goddard, after which the choir sang "Lo, the mighty God appearing."

RUDGER CLAWSON.

Elder Rudger Clawson of the council of twelve was the first speaker. He said, "Lord, I am glad to be here and to do all things well. Last evening we sent a beautiful shower which cooled the air and dried the dust, and today it is beautiful for the people to move about."

"Speaking of the weather reminds me of a capitalist who went to Kansas to look at a large farm. He inquired deprecatingly as to the quality of the soil. 'Well,' said the farmer, 'it is good and productive.' He then inquired as to the climate when the farmer said it was very fine. As an illustration, he said he had several hundred chickens which he wished to get to market in the busy season. He was saved the trouble of doing so by a cyclone which twisted their necks plucked them and carried them to market."

The speaker enlighened the climate of Utah and then said in desire to speak on the subject of priesthood, which is the authority of God delegated to man by which they can build up His kingdom on earth. Priests have the authority of God to administer to the members of the Church of Christ you will find the priesthood. It is said in one of the revelations of God to Joseph Smith that priesthood continues in the Church of God always. It is spoken of as an everlasting priesthood.

Speaking of the weather reminds me of a capitalist who went to Kansas to look at a large farm. He inquired deprecatingly as to the quality of the soil. 'Well,' said the farmer, 'it is good and productive.'

"Speaking of the weather reminds me of a capitalist who went to Kansas to look at a large farm. He inquired deprecatingly as to the quality of the soil. 'Well,' said the farmer, 'it is good and productive.'

"Speaking of the weather reminds me of a capitalist who went to Kansas to look at a large farm. He inquired deprecatingly as to the quality of the soil. 'Well,' said the farmer, 'it is good and productive.'

"Speaking of the weather reminds me of a capitalist who went to Kansas to look at a large farm. He inquired deprecatingly as to the quality of the soil. 'Well,' said the farmer, 'it is good and productive.'

"Speaking of the weather reminds me of a capitalist who went to Kansas to look at a large farm. He inquired deprecatingly as to the quality of the soil. 'Well,' said the farmer, 'it is good and productive.'

"Speaking of the weather reminds me of a capitalist who went to Kansas to look at a large farm. He inquired deprecatingly as to the quality of the soil. 'Well,' said the farmer, 'it is good and productive.'

"Speaking of the weather reminds me of a capitalist who went to Kansas to look at a large farm. He inquired deprecatingly as to the quality of the soil. 'Well,' said the farmer, 'it is good and productive.'

"Speaking of the weather reminds me of a capitalist who went to Kansas to look at a large farm. He inquired deprecatingly as to the quality of the soil. 'Well,' said the farmer, 'it is good and productive.'

"Speaking of the weather reminds me of a capitalist who went to Kansas to look at a large farm. He inquired deprecatingly as to the quality of the soil. 'Well,' said the farmer, 'it is good and productive.'

"Speaking of the weather reminds me of a capitalist who went to Kansas to look at a large farm. He inquired deprecatingly as to the quality of the soil. 'Well,' said the farmer, 'it is good and productive.'

"Speaking of the weather reminds me of a capitalist who went to Kansas to look at a large farm. He inquired deprecatingly as to the quality of the soil. 'Well,' said the farmer, 'it is good and productive.'

"Speaking of the weather reminds me of a capitalist who went to Kansas to look at a large farm. He inquired deprecatingly as to the quality of the soil. 'Well,' said the farmer, 'it is good and productive.'

"Speaking of the weather reminds me of a capitalist who went to Kansas to look at a large farm. He inquired deprecatingly as to the quality of the soil. 'Well,' said the farmer, 'it is good and productive.'

"Speaking of the weather reminds me of a capitalist who went to Kansas to look at a large farm. He inquired deprecatingly as to the quality of the soil. 'Well,' said the farmer, 'it is good and productive.'

"Speaking of the weather reminds me of a capitalist who went to Kansas to look at a large farm. He inquired deprecatingly as to the quality of the soil. 'Well,' said the farmer, 'it is good and productive.'

"Speaking of the weather reminds me of a capitalist who went to Kansas to look at a large farm. He inquired deprecatingly as to the quality of the soil. 'Well,' said the farmer, 'it is good and productive.'

"Speaking of the weather reminds me of a capitalist who went to Kansas to look at a large farm. He inquired deprecatingly as to the quality of the soil. 'Well,' said the farmer, 'it is good and productive.'

"Speaking of the weather reminds me of a capitalist who went to Kansas to look at a large farm. He inquired deprecatingly as to the quality of the soil. 'Well,' said the farmer, 'it is good and productive.'

"Speaking of the weather reminds me of a capitalist who went to Kansas to look at a large farm. He inquired deprecating