I will rel Among the nations they are very fre-quently submitted to what is termed the "arbitrament of the sword." That, however, is a very poor thing when put into the scales of justice. I have heard it said, for instance, when certain ques tions have arisen in the United Statesthat is, in regard to States rights and in regard to the rights of the people, out. and in regard to how far they should be sustained in their privileges, rights te. I have heard some people very lippantly say, "Oh, that has been decided by the sword." A very slugular piece of justice is a sword with which to administer one's social, political, or national affairs. When we come to put it in the balance of the goddess of jusice-who is supposed to be blind and to hold the scales evenly-it will not stand the test. Hence when people make this remark it shows that they are very ignorant of the principles of urisprudence, of the rights of man, of o its people, or the people to the But what I wanted particularly to arrive at are the principles associated with this case that has come up before
