Wanted on Hotel Clerks.

A few honorable exceptions, the hotel clerk of the period is an insufferable creature, who manages to interpose between the invisible proprietor and the unfortunate guest, and to create a whole host of unnecessary antagonisms between the two. He is an unkindly illustration of obstinately indifference to the real duties of his position, and of absorption in the contemplation of its supreme importance.

How to reform him into a reasonable, respectable, and useful human being, has been the subject of much thought and talk—so far to no much purpose. Now, however, comes forward a bold experimenter, who proposes the simple expedient of trying the female variety of clerk.

He keeps a popular hotel in the interior of Massachusetts, and last May installed as chief clerk a bright and intelligent woman whose administration has proved a complete success. A correspondent of the Boston Post says:

"In place of the silly young man who usually receives you and condescends to allow you to remain an inmate of the house at a generous rate of daily compensation, the visitor to Ingleside is met by a pretty, graceful, blonde-haired girl, who gives him such a cordial welcome, and looks out so earnestly and quickly for his comfort, that he feels at home at once."

We are not surprised to learn that the office was, last summer, "the pleasantest place of resort," that the gentlemen were "decent and polite," or that the hotel management is "honest and upright." Whether as a new feature in hotel management, or as an illustration of what a plucky, cheerful, capable, and willing young woman may do to "enlarge her sphere," the success of this experiment is worth noting.—N. Y. Mail.

Sensations.

We have for some time been pained at the constant evidence that the telegraph wires furnish us of the growing disregard of law, and even contempt for law, order, and good government. We mourn over the constantly increasing number of crimes of the blackest type and grieve that we cannot see a prospect of our countrymen awakening to a sense of the debt of fealty and homage they owe to the law and to the peace of society, but we do see that under the great principles that lie deep in civilization, in the very foundation of our criminal code, that men are presumed innocent until found guilty, and entitled to a fair and impartial hearing before they are declared amenable to the law; it is unfair, unjust, prejudicial and contrary to law and morality for the public, and too often for the press, to take up the forms and names, and without authentic evidence of their truth, spread them not only before the world at large, but especially before the community from which is to be selected the jury that shall pass upon the life of the accused.

Let this everlasting craving after sensations, the love of excite and liberty to satisfy us, for though the law is fixed and unalterable and notable to these influences, men are but human, and by the very necessity of their nature prone to prejudice.—Cheyenne Leader.

A Fool for Luck.

A fool was made rich at Long Branch, in spite of himself, and this is the way it was done: "Just as it was the hungriest, Longfellow and Harry Bassett were brought out and their coat round the corner into two Colt's revolvers. All the sites young men around me stood up and bowed and scraped, and held one finger as if they were stopping an omnibus. They all yelled: 'A hundred to eighty on Harry Bassett.' They all appeared to be so very polite, that I did up my finger too, and nodded and bowed to all of them. I never was so polite a lot of young men before. You would have thought I was the Grand Duke Alexis. I kept up the bowing just as long as they did, and pretty soon the race was over, and I confess I was agreeably surprised to see about four hundred young men file up and down and chuck a $100 bill into the cap. Then I thought that lot of young men about the nicest lot of young men I had ever met. There I sat, with $40,000 in my lap, and, much to my astonishment, I found that all the time I was pointing my finger and bowing back at em, down I went, taking a fall, and the fool that was made and damed if I knew it. I only had eight dollars in my pocket, and if I'd lost, I'd slept in an oyster bed that night sure."

Grant's Indian Policy.

Major E. P. Smith, Indian agent for Northern Minnesota, and one of the earliest appointees of President Grant, bears the following testimony to the success of the present Indian policy.

When he was there according to treaty stipulations, he should have been a school teacher, but, though the salary had been regularly drawn, no teaching had been done. There should have been a school house, but, though duly paid for, it did not exist. There should have been a saw mill, but, while something so-called was there, it would not saw boards. The whole old Government employee had been sent north to be buried within a quarter of a mile of one's home without a police officer. But a great change has been wrought. The Indians have built houses, cultivated lands, formed congregations for worship, and improved in dress. There is no doubt of their capability for civilization.

Brock Pomroy says they naturalize a man in New York City in less than ten kicks of a cat. The candidate for citizenship looks scared, answers a few questions, signs his name or makes his mark on a piece of paper, and then a clerk says:

"Here! Take hold the book. Hold-jer up! You Seamus Juncious, do solemn never year an ounce alidin cover all your parts potentalion special of God powr own swip. Now God kin the book come five cents."

Soon as the seven-five cents are paid down the man is a citizen of the United States, but if he don't pay, the oath does not count.
