Alla Club Reception to President's Party; An Elaborate Spread and a Large Crowd

The reception at the Alla club at noon immediately following the speeches at the Tabernacle developed into a veritable crush...

A dainty luncheon was served in the big dining hall upstairs and those who arrived late waited their turn until there were vacant seats.

The Twelfth Infantry band was stationed in the west parlor and discoursed music while the guests partook of the cold collation that was served for their delectation by an army of waiters.

There was no formal program, the guests simply chatted and had a most enjoyable time generally. At the table of honor there were several toasts drunk standing, but there were no speeches.

Presidential Breakfast and Guests; The President as a Story Teller; Off for Ogden

The prolonged services at the Tabernacle made the party somewhat late in reaching Senator Kearns' mansion for breakfast.

number of campaign "yarns" and his personal experiences while he was touring in the west at the time of the McKinley-Roosevelt campaign.

The menu was of the most elegant character, and the various dishes were, of course, served in the most tasteful and handsome style.

Crowds Closed Around President's Carriage; Were Quickly Dispersed by Secret Service Men

The first indication of the crowd breaking into the street and surrounding the president's carriage during the parade, was in the vicinity of the federal building site.

under arrest, too. Last evening in a boating man he said he could out-pole the president, and intended to challenge him to a target contest.

GLORIOUS DECORATIONS. Salt Lake a Blaze of Red, White and Blue.

Salt Lake was a blaze of red, white and blue today, and the streets along which the president's line of march lay, were especially resplendent.

Down town, Auerbach's building was gaily decorated from top to bottom, and many were the compliments bestowed upon it for the taste displayed.

The Deseret News building, the first big edifice to salute the president as he came up South Temple, was handsomely decorated by the Deseret News, the O. S. L., the book store, the Willis-Horne Drug Co., and the various tenants of the building.

DOTS AND DASHES.

It was a gala day for the children. This is a day long to be remembered by the people of Salt Lake.

The top of the Keith building on East Temple street furnished a good place for many people to see the president.

The "war whoop" of the Indian war veterans, which they gave as they passed by the reviewing stand, was particularly pleasing to the president.

A lot of employees of the electric light works were lined up in front of the Auerbach store during the parade.

The letter carriers of the Salt Lake postoffice were in the parade. Each member was donned in the regulation uniform and each carried a cane.

One incident of the parade was two small boys astride a pony. When they passed the reviewing stand at the City and County building, the president clasped his hands and spoke to them.

The team belonging to Senator Kearns and attached to the president's carriage on the drive from the depot to the city and county building, was really a little too fractious for the public safety.

Special Deputy Sheriff Harmon found at the Tabernacle this morning an endorsed check for $50, together with other papers of no value to one but the owner.

The official reporter of the president's party stated to a well known official after the meeting at the Tabernacle that it compared favorably with the meeting held by the president at the Auditorium in Chicago.

A pleasing incident occurred at the city and county building just as the president was leaving the reviewing stand. In the midst of the bustling crowd clamoring to shake hands with the distinguished visitor the latter remarked: "I can't shake hands with all of you but, (cupping a little to who was standing near) here is one I must shake hands with."

Councilman A. J. Davis, in speaking today of the decorations, said that he was in St. Louis, Detroit, Los Angeles and San Francisco at the time the president visited those cities and that the display of flags, bunting and decorations generally was not nearly so good as in our own city today.

TABERNACLE NOTES.

The first big cheer that went up from the audience was when Presidents Smith, Winder and Lund entered the building and took their places on the corner of the platform.

Another event that was the signal for a big burst of applause was the illumination of the figure of President Roosevelt painted on the big banner which hung in front of the organ.

The greatest burst of applause heard during the day probably came after Secy. Moody's announcement that if Congress, with the help of our three members, gave him five new warships next session, he would do all he could to see that one of them was named "Utah."

The president led the applause that followed Miss Ramsey's rendition of "The Flag Without a Stain." He quite insisted on her returning to the platform to sing the second verse over again, and at the conclusion he arose and shook hands with the Utah singer, at which the audience shook the building with its cheers.

The president's voice during his speech was pitched in a high, tense key. His frequent gestures to illustrate his points and he always "brought down the house" when he wanted to score a pleasantry, by an odd trick of ending with a rising inflection, something after the fashion of the actor Stuart Robson.

The delightful informality that exists in the president's official family was shown by the running fire of comments that was kept up between him and Secy. Moody and Wilson.

PRESBYTERIANS WANT SENATOR SMOOT EXPELLED. Los Angeles, Cal., May 29.—The commissioners of the Presbyterian general assembly assembled tardily this morning for a business session at Immanuel church, the press of yesterday's many events having left them somewhat indisposed for work today.

The question of "Mormonism," which has received much attention from the assembly, was the first subject taken up when Moderator Coyle called the commissioners to order.
