

SOME CHARACTERISTIC FIELD SCENES.

hisses were heard, but for the most part he was greeted with silent silence. The same unexpressed hostility characterized the demeanor of the audience that had assembled inside the building when the preacher strode to the platform where the oratorical champions of labor were already seated.

LITTLE MINISTER CHERISHED.

A striking figure he made as he turned and faced that sea of angry faces without a tremor of nervousness. Of slight frame, with delicately chiseled, clean-shaven features, wavy, prematurely gray hair, thick, insistent, protruding chin, and a strong, throat-cutting gaze, he looked like the incarnation of moral and intellectual heroism—such a man as one might fancy bravely going to the stake in the old days for his opinions. Very impressive was the contrast between him and those whom he confronted. His, but a few men most of them were, who earned their living by manual labor which left them little time or inclination for what is called culture, and oppressed them with the feeling that somehow they didn't get a fair show in this world. Added to this was a strong feeling of resentment against one who had been so richly blessed with all that had been denied them should have criticized the class they represented so harshly. But as they looked upon the little man facing them boldly, seized by a curious psychological impulse, they burst forth into a spontaneous cheer. It was the tribute of the British workman to pluck. It gave the preacher his cue, if he needed any.

MAKES PLUCKY TALK.

"I am not a prisoner at the bar, and I am not standing here on the defensive," he began. "If I was your assailant and critic when I wrote those words I am your assailant and critic now." Then he went on to tell them that he was there to repeat the hard things he had said of them. When it came to their turn to speak he asked for no mercy at their hands. They could criticize his salary, his method of life, his motor car, his home, his looks—anything they pleased—and he would answer them as best he could. Some of the labor orators smiled grimly as they thought how they would handle him when they got their innings.

But, they should understand, that he was no enemy of working men as such. Many of them were among his best friends and allies at the City Temple. "Six of them," he added with a sly smile, "have come with me here tonight to see that none of you punch my head."

A brave working man laughed and others followed his example. Their au-

The vigor of the Japanese attack and the haste of the Russians to retreat can be gathered from two of the above pictures. lence vanished. The preacher was paying the way for final victory. After a little more of what his audience called "straight talk" in a clear, cutting voice, he repeated some of the most pungent passages in his article which had aroused their enmity.

"Two-thirds of the national drink bill is incurred by the working man. His keenest struggles are for shorter hours and better wages, but not that he may employ them for higher ends. He is often lazy, unthrifty, improvident, sometimes immoral, foul-mouthed and untruthful. Unlike the American worker, he has comparatively little aspiration or ambition."

And so the battle was waged. Frequently the audience cheered against its will. Once only was the little minister shouted down, but he waited until he could make himself heard and there was fire in his eyes as he rose again. "There is one thing you can't stand," he said, "You can't stand facts." And immediately the audience gave a demonstration of what they could stand by argumentative powers that won the fight for him. Before the debate was APPLAUDING HIM. But it was dead silence that proclaimed his final victory. Did he approve of trade unions? Yes, he did, but not of all their developments. Did he believe that on the whole the men who worked the shortest hours and got the most pay were the most moral and best behaved? He did.

But—and here in turn he questioned his questioners—did they really believe that the majority of those who enjoyed these privileges employed them for self-development, for moral and intellectual growth—in short for high ends? There was no response and at that moment one might almost have heard a pin fall, where a few minutes before had been such a babel of tongues.

All was comparatively smooth sailing for the preacher after that. But it was his personality quite as much as his who had shown so much pluck. All this while a big crowd had been waiting outside. But by some subtle process of telepathy the change of feeling which those inside had undergone towards the little minister had been communicated to them, and when he left the building they cheered him, too.

Best Liniment on Earth.

Henry D. Baldwin, Supt. City Water Works, Shullsburg, Wis., writes: "I have tried many kinds of liniment, but I have never received much benefit until I used Ballard's Snow Liniment for rheumatism and pains. I think it the best liniment on earth." 25c, 50c, $1.00. Sold by Z. C. M. I. Drug Dept.

Hard Colds.

People whose blood is pure are not nearly so likely to take hard colds as are others. Physiology goes into the reason. Hood's Sarsaparilla makes the blood pure, causing healthy action of the mucous membrane and giving strength and tone to all the organs and functions. This great medicine recovers the system after a cold, as no other does.
