qule, free of organisms. The water that comes from the average city main or country spring is alive with microscopic plants and animals, even when it seems clear and sparkling. These minute organisms, as a rule, are harmless to adults, but in the delicate stomach of the baby they are apt to cause disturbances, and so they must be eliminated. The best way to get rid of them is to allow the water to boil 20 minutes. After that, let it cool and store it in clean, well-corked bottles which have been previously immersed in boiling water for five minutes. Glass stoppers are better than corks.

Boiled water is tasteless and insipid because of the absence of air-bubbles, but the baby seldom notices it. It is raw and hard, but just so they will not be meanly. Let them cool in their skins. When cold, peel them, divide lengthwise in quarters and slice as thin as possible into a bowl. Heat ready one medium sized onion (Bermuda), peeled and shredded fine, also one cupful of thinly sliced celery, if in season, and one sweet green pepper, freed from seeds and white ribs and seeded two minutes and minced.

To each layer of potato add a sprinkling of the mixed vegetable, shake on salt and pepper or cayenne, as if you were seasoning it at table; add one tablespoonful (or more if the potato will absorb it) of olive-oil and a scant tablespoonful of vinegar. In this way materials are mixed without making the potato mushy. When all the potatoes are sliced, toss up lightly with two forks and set away in a cold place to ripen till serving time.

Then taste and add more salt, oil or vinegar as needed. Potatoes, if allowed to stand in the dressing, will absorb a large amount of oil and also of vinegar, and the salad is much richer and more palatable than one quickly prepared with half of the oil left on the plate. Remember in this, as in all salads, to add oil first; the vegetable may absorb it, for if wet first with the vinegar the oil simply rolls off. Arrange on a salad dish, garnish with a border of crisp lettuce, the stem ends stuck in under the potato; if you wish to make a more substantial dish of it, cover the salad with sifted yolk of hard-boiled egg and rings or slivers of the white; or serve a little mayonnaise with each portion.

For egg toast beat one egg, add one-half teaspoonful of salt and one cupful of milk. Soak in it from four to six slices of bread, then brown them in hot butter on each side. Serve with crabapple jelly. This is a convenient dish for supper; it is warm, savory and substantial; it may be varied in many ways and quickly prepared when the larder seems to be nearly empty.

other herds, again never return to the same feeding grounds, and then the hunter seeks them.

He pitches a spear and starts a long and patient watch when he reaches a district he feels the caribou will graze through. During the few daylight hours he does not close an eye or cease warily to scan each recurring sign of game, and for days he will scout and smoke and watch with Indian stoicism and Roman faithfulness.
