PRESIDENT RIGBY DEAD.

Dies at Logan from Dropsy and Bright's Disease.

(Special to the "News.")

Logan, March 13.—President William F. Rigby, counselor to President Thomas E. Ricks, of the Fremont Stake, Idaho, died at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Lavina C. Card, this morning, after an illness from Bright's disease and dropsy, covering a period of six or eight months.

The deceased was of English birth and was born in 1832. He came to Utah in 1857 and settled in Salt Lake, after which he lived at Lehi and Wellsville, going to the last named place in 1881. He was bishop of Clarkston for several years, and then Bishop of Newton, which town he founded.

In 1881, when the "Mormon" settlements were engaged in opening up the Teton valley, he was chosen first counselor to President Thomas E. Ricks, of the Fremont Stake and held the position up to the time of his death. President Rigby also filled numerous civil positions, the duties of which were, as he said, ever honorably and faithfully discharged.

He leaves a large family, many friends and a wide reputation. His funeral will probably be held from the Logan Tabernacle on Sunday. Interment will be at Newton.

FAUST AS AN "OPERA."

A Synopsis of Gounod's Music of the Celebrated Work, by Prof. Evan Stephens.

ACT I.

The orchestra gives us a loud call for silence. Then we hear it restlessly weaving and in deep but sweet harmonies representing the learned "Old Faust" in his discontent searching after knowledge, soon to be interrupted by the beautiful melody telling of Valentine's love of sister and home. "Faust" (the tenor) then begins his disconsolate lamentations—interrupted by the merry song of the youthful reapers. What a charming contrast here between the two extreme phases of life! The soprano voices break out like a bright sunbeam in the gloom. The male chorus that follows is equally striking, ending in the dying away chords of "Rejoice and Pray." Then comes the jocular, half weird, but always elegant, taunting music of "Mephisto" contrasted again with the enchanting music of Love as he shows to Faust the vision of youth and love. The joyous duet between the rejuvenated Faust and Mephisto ending the act.

ACT II.

The opening "Kirmess" chorus serves well as "noise music" of the rabble. But it is at the entrance of "Valentine" that Gounod becomes in earnest. Emotion here begins to carry us away with not only his beautiful song, "Even Bravest Heart Must Suffer," where the hero's love is expressed; but the very dialogue is heart-music, contrasted finely again with the comrades' call for "Wine and Song." And Mephisto's sarcastic songs, "Make Way for the King of the Fairies," a weirdly alluring effect, while the quartet ending with the strong male chorus, where they dare Satan to harm them when they present the sign of the cross, is sublime. This scene gives way to the merriest of the opera, the "Kirmess" chorus, interrupted by the momentary meeting of Faust and Marguerite, brings to a brilliant and happy close the second act.

ACT III.

This act contains perhaps the most tenderly exquisite "Love music" in existence. The entire solo cast of the opera, excepting "Mephisto," are here all heard to the fullest advantage. Seibel the "boy lover," opens the scene with his "Flower Song"; then Faust's song of rapture at seeing the humble abode of Marguerite. "Salve, di moria!" and the deliciously romantic musical work begins. Her old fashioned song at the spinning wheel, followed by that palpitating—"Joy, Jewel Song," and the love scene that follows, with its quartets, duets and solos alternating—if it all has a fault, it is that it is too sensuously beautiful.

ACT IV.

The bliss of love is over. Its tragic woe is now the music of friendship and love. Seibel's sweet song of friendship and love, earnest tenderness, when "hark the bugles are sounding!" Valentine returns with his victorious comrades. And we are soon carried away with the tramp of the "soldiers chorus," but only to be more deeply plunged into sorrow as Valentine learns of his sister's shame. To emphasize this, Faust and "Mephisto" appear on the scene, and the latter sings his diabolical serenade of advice to Faust. Valentine takes up the insult, and we have the mainly stirring trio of the duel, where Valentine is slain. A know of nothing more cordial, pathetic and effective in music than this scene of the death of Valentine; the outcries of the exultant crowd (chorus) the wailing of Marguerite and Seibel, the cursing of his slayer by Valentine, and the few measures of the march sung by the chorus (unaccompanied) at the death, is all undeniably effective.

ACT V.

The scene at the church is terribly effective as amid the organ music is heard now the glottings of Mephisto's prayers, now the hymns of the choir, then the calls of Demons, and ending in the beautiful passionate prayer of Marguerite, accompanied by the soprano, and tenors in chorus. The scene and scene of this act (the prison) brings the passionate music of love to us again, as Marguerite finds herself in the arms of Faust, and in her delirium she rehearses the music of the first meeting, and then the "Kirmess" chorus, where he first won her affections. How passionate and earnest the love duet, and how heart-rending the parting! Then that ever ascending prayer of Marguerite as death draws near, and she repeats the "Kirmess" chorus, higher and higher that voice soars, in the confidence of forgiveness. And the crowning of the great work is reached as, to the demand of Satan for his victims, the grand burst of song, "Heavenly choir breaks out to the words: "No! Not So! All who have sinned, May repent the sin, Let earth be severe, Heaven is forgiving."

Who can hear those grand harmonies, and not feel the blessed meaning of that message thrill him? Gounod's immortal fame rests on "Faust" and it rests on a solid foundation.

AMUSEMENTS.

The attendance at the Theater last night held up surprisingly well, considering the length of the Modjeska engagement.

The house was not crowded, but the attendance was more than fair and thoroughly representative. "Macbeth" has been done so often in Salt Lake that it is small wonder that even Modjeska's fame could not arouse a wide degree of interest. Lovers of Shakespeare, however, found in her beautiful delineation of Lady Macbeth a source of rare pleasure, and her portrayal of the many differing phases of the role was admirable. Especially notable was the strength displayed in the scene of Duncan's murder and in the sleep walking part. Mr. McLean assisted her with a fine interpretation of Macbeth. Few men who have essayed the part here have rendered its eloquent features more strikingly; his reading is at all times excellent, and his deep, rich tones make it a pleasure to hear him give Shakespeare's lines. Mr. Johnston, while capable as the role was, did not arouse a wide degree of interest. Lovers of the previous night. The remainder of the support can be ranked as fair.

This afternoon "Mary Stuart" is being rendered, and tonight "King John" will be repeated.

"The Eleventh Hour" has evidently "caught on" at the Grand. The attendance was even heavier than on the previous night, and the signs of approval, especially after the second act, in the closing act, were unbounded as ever. The engagement closes tonight.

The Herald had itself an injustice this morning in correcting an erroneous notice of the "King John" performance. It was right in the first instance, when it said that Junius Brutus Booth played the role here some 25 years ago, but it was Junius Brutus Booth, the younger, not the elder. Junius Brutus Booth had three sons, J. B., Edwin and J. Wilkes, the latter being the famous assassin of President Lincoln. J. B., the younger, was the husband of Agnes Booth, who played the part of Constance with here. Joe Wheelock was the Falconbridge in the same rendition.

It is indeed "bringing coats to New-castle" to announce an organ recital in Salt Lake at concert prices. It is to be regretted that the noted organist, Clarence Eddy, or his advisers, could not have realized this before he came to Salt Lake. The few musicians who assembled at the concert, and the church last night were greatly mortified to see the very slim audience which assembled to greet Mr. Eddy. But the truth is that the public has had so many, and such admirable recitals at the Tabernacle without charge, that there could be no hope of attracting an audience which was required to pay admission. Mr. Eddy is so thorough a master of the instrument that his playing is not taxing, and his playing of the various numbers gave him pleasure to his listeners. Miss Stuart, the vocalist, has an excellent soprano voice, and was warmly greeted.

The Sembrich concert at the Tabernacle is set for tomorrow night. All who are not familiar with the story of "Faust" would do well to read Prof. Stephens' descriptive synopsis of the music, printed in another column of the "News."

TEMPLE BLOCK TREES.

S. J. Sudbury Tells Something About the Planting of Them.

S. J. Sudbury, a veteran Salt Lake called at the "News" office today and made a statement regarding the planting of the trees which were recently removed from the sidewalk skirting the Temple Block. Said he:

"I do not know who planted the first trees, but this I do know—they did grow, and were taken up to give place to trees brought from Liberty Park and planted by Carl Capen, a Swedishman now in advanced years living at Mill street. Mr. Capen's son, a young gardener of the king of Sweden and Carl had learned much from him in the way of care for trees. He said that he would plant all of the replaced trees himself, and he did so. He said also that they would grow and they did, too. These were the trees recently

WM. H. GEORGE DEAD.

William H. George, a young man 29 years of age, who had a large circle of friends among the business and clerical elements of the city, died at the Salt Lake hospital last night, to which institution he had been taken a few days ago for the purpose of undergoing a surgical operation. The operation, however, was not performed owing to his physical condition, and he died from hemorrhage of the brain.

PEOPLE WHO ARE PASSING

Prince Engaltcheffe, a Russian nobleman, was in Salt Lake for several hours yesterday en route from China to St. Petersburg. He was seen at the station to the hotel Knutsford on the street car and had dinner there, immediately leaving without even registering. He wandered about town by himself until the train going east over the Rio Grande Western was ready to depart. The prince is a very tall, distinguished looking man with a heavy brown beard. When he arrived in the city, two young men were with him, but they joined their trip to Chicago. The prince was seen by a reporter, but he refused to say anything except that he had been so terribly misrepresented by some newspaper men in San Francisco, that in future he intended not to talk to reporters, and he wished to avoid publicity. It is said by a railroad man in this city that the prince stand very high in railroad circles in Russia, and that he is carrying with him to Russia the final plans for some railroad to be built and operated in connection with the Trans-Siberian railroad. The railroads in Russia are owned by the government so the prince represents the Russian minister of finance and the railroad department. He also represents Count Adolph Rothstein, a very wealthy capitalist of St. Petersburg, and it is said that his visit to China was to secure the control of the Hankow-Canton railway for the count and a Russian syndicate.

HEART DISEASE.

Some Facts Regarding the Rapid Increase of Heart Trouble.

Heart trouble, at least among the Americans, is certainly increasing, and while this may be largely due to the excitement and worry of American business life, it is more often the result of weak stomachs, of poor digestion.

Real organic disease is incurable; but not one case in a hundred of heart trouble is organic.

The close relation between heart trouble and poor digestion is because both organs are controlled by the same great nerves, the Sympathetic and Pneumogastric.

In another way, also, the heart is affected by the form of poor digestion, which causes gas and fermentation from half digested food. There is a feeling of oppression and heaviness in the chest caused by pressure of the disordered stomach on the heart and lungs, interfering with their action; hence arises palpitation and short breath.

Poor digestion also poisons the blood, making it thin and watery, which irritates and weakens the heart.

The most sensible treatment for heart trouble is to improve the digestion and to insure the prompt assimilation of food.

This can be done by the regular use of some safe, pleasant and effective digestive preparation like Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets, which may be found at most drug stores, and which contain valuable, harmless digestive elements in a pleasant, convenient form.

It is safe to say that the regular persistent use of Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets at meal time will cure any form of stomach trouble except cancer of the stomach.

Full sized package of these tablets sold by druggists at 50 cents. Little book on stomach troubles mailed free. Address P. A. Stuart Co., Marshall, Mich.
