AGRICULTURAL.

CO-OPERATIVE BUTTER MAKING.—Co-operative or Factory cheese making has long been a success. At first the result of accident, the principle has been so successful, and so great an improvement over the old system of "farm dairies," that our production has more than trebled. The quality is greatly superior, and we are fast becoming the cheese makers of the world. While this system has been developing so rapidly and with such great results, the manufacture of butter has been but little improved, and the old system of farm dairies remains the same as it was fifty years ago. True, there have been a few "creameries" established on the co-operative plan near our large cities, for the manufacture of butter suitable for immediate use, but in our great dairying districts, where the bulk of our butter is made, the old methods are almost universally in use, and as a consequence, the quality of the greater part of the butter sent to this market exhibits the same variety of good, bad and indifferent as the cheese market did under the old style of cheese making. Ask any wholesale butter merchant what proportion of the butter he receives is of really fine quality, and he will tell you about five per cent. Ask any grocer what article in his stock is hardest to find of fine quality, and he will unhesitatingly tell you butter. Now this arises from a variety of causes, but the principal cause is that there is a lack of general system in the manufacture. Farmers will tell you that it depends on skill, or the feed, or the water, or the salt, or a dozen other things, all of which doubtless have a minor effect. But we claim that a proper system would go far towards equalizing and removing these defects, and place the manufacture of butter on much the same footing as that of cheese. An association of farmers conveying their milk to a manufactory owned in common, could afford to employ the best talent to superintend it; could afford to have the best utensils, the best water; could afford to have a better and more perfect equipment in every respect, than any ordinary individual possibly could. This would inevitably bring greater perfection and uniformity of product, and as surely bring much greater prices in the market than the majority of farm dairies. The butter milk could be used for feeding hogs and calves the same as now, subscribers being allowed for this in proportion to the number of cows they milked, or the quantity of milk delivered.—The South.

TEN RULES FOR MILKING:—Women make the best milkers. Stephens, in his Book of the Farm, says he never sees a man milking without thinking that he is usurping a place that does not belong to him. It would seem as though farmers had combined together to banish women from the barn-yard and cow-house. We can think of no other reason for allowing the yard to remain so dirty.

Milking requires a little skill, gentleness and patience. And we insist that if men will milk, they should do the work properly.

1st. The cows should be milked at the same hours every day, Sunday and week days.

2nd. If you milk "Daisy" first to-day and "Brindle" second, do not milk Brindle first to-morrow and Daisy second, but always milk them in the established order. Few pay any attention to this point, but it is an important matter, especially in a large dairy, as any irregularity makes the cows uneasy.

3rd. The same man should milk the same cows.

4th. No talking should be permitted during milking unless for the purpose of soothing the cow. The man who uses harsh words, to say nothing of blows, deserves to be kicked out of the stable.

5th. A kicking cow should be treated kindly and have her legs tied. It is the only sure preventive and is little trouble.

6th. Have a three-legged milking stool. A one-legged stool is a nuisance.

7th. Wash your hands before going to milk, and if the cows teats are dirty wash them also with water. It is very common to milk some milk into the hand and then moisten the teats with it. We have often done it ourselves, but cannot recommend the practice. Water is better.

8th. Sit close to the cow. Do not stick your head in her flank, but sit upright; you will milk easier, and have more control over the cow. Hold the pail firmly between your knees and do not let it touch the ground. We need hardly say that you should sit on the right hand side of the cow, or what teamsters call the "off side." Of course it makes no difference which side if she is only used to it. And it may be that as there are left hand plows, there may be in our widely extended parish left hand cows also. In this case you will have to sit with your right hand toward the cow's hind leg, instead of the left hand, as is the usual custom.

9th. Do not milk too fast at first. Rub the teats or bag a little, and soothe the cow. Then as the milk begins to come down freely, strike a steady regular motion, and continue it without stopping, until all the milk is drawn from the udder. Rapid milking is desirable, but steady milking is still more important. Some people milk with a stripping motion of the hands. They pull down on the teats. This is a bad practice. A good milker may bear down a little, but if he does he is hardly conscious of it. Nearly all the milking is done by the three lower fingers. The forefinger and thumb are first pressed tightly round the teat so as to prevent the milk from going back, and then the three lower fingers are contracted until the milk is forced out. There is no pulling or stripping—the milk is simply forced out by the contraction of the fingers. The forefinger and thumb are first closed, and then the next finger, and then the next, and finally the little finger, and as one finger closes, the second finger begins to relax so as to allow the milk to come into the teat. In this way there is a steady, uninterrupted stream of milk forced out. This cannot be done with a stripping motion.

10th. Milk clean. Not a drop of milk should be left in the udder. The last drawn milk is not only by far the richest, but if the cows are not milked clean they soon fall off in their milk. Our own practice is to insist on the men going over the cows again as soon as they are through milking, and "strip the cows." If a man is really a clean milker, this is not necessary, but it is ordinarily necessary to adopt the rule.—Hearth and Home.

HOLDING UP MILK.—A writer in the American Ayriculturist says he has found his cows will always let down their milk when inclined to hold it up if he gives them some salt to lick.
