

UNVEIL MONUMENT IN CITY CEMETERY

Memory of Hirini Whaanga Honored by Large Gathering This Morning.

TRIBUTE TO HIS RACE.

President Joseph F. Smith Declares Pacific Islanders to be of the Highest Type.

In the city cemetery a monument was unveiled today in memory of the late Hirini Whaanga, who died in this city Oct. 17, 1905. Several hundred persons were in attendance, and the ceremony was very impressive, the services consisting of short addresses, music and the uncovering of the stone. Mrs. Mary Hall Bean, a native of New Zealand, raising the American flag from the stone.

The principal address was made by President Joseph F. Smith, who expressed a high regard for the Polynesian race, of whom he considered Hirini Whaanga one of the noblest types. The opinion sometimes expressed that the natives of the Pacific Islands are an inferior race, shows a lack of information, declared the speaker. He himself had labored among the islanders, not of New Zealand, but among their distant relatives, the Hawaiians, and there he had found some of the noblest spirits that he had anywhere known, people having no superiors anywhere. He believed the same could be said of the New Zealanders, and he had known the man in whose honor the monument was dedicated to have been noble and upright in all his ways. The tribute of this day was well deserved by Hirini Whaanga and his people, in whose hearts the gospel of Christ has found permanent lodgment, as it has among the peoples of many other Pacific Islands.

TRAITS OF CHARACTER.

The Polynesians, said President Smith, are characterized by firmness and integrity to any cause to which they are converted. Should temptation overcome them at times, they are more sincerely repentant and seek to atone for wrongdoing. There would be many more representatives of those races here, he said, if local conditions were more favorable for their colonization. In time such organizations and institutions will be provided for the islands of the sea and other foreign countries that Church members there may receive the same privileges and blessings as are enjoyed by the Saints at home.

Following President Smith's remarks, Mrs. Whaanga, widow of Hirini Whaanga, feelingly expressed her gratitude for the manifestations of love and consideration extended towards her deceased husband, herself and the Maoris. She spoke in her native tongue, and her remarks were interpreted by Elder Ezra T. Stevenson. Before assuming her seat, she took from a basket a robe which she placed about the shoulders of President Smith, such a custom being usual among the natives of New Zealand when they wish to express great honor upon a person. The garment was hand-made, in colors of white, red, blue and black.

Elder Benjamin Goddard paid a high tribute to the memory of the departed chief, who the speaker described as being one of the noblest characters and purest men known to the Polynesians. He was a king among his people, yet he was as humble as a little child. After receiving the gospel he labored zealously to teach it to his people, and after sojourning in Utah a short time, returned to his native land to again bear testimony to the divinity of the gospel.

A short sketch of the opening of the various Pacific Islands missions was given by Elder Andrew Jensen. Preaching was first done in New Zealand in 1855, but active work among the natives did not commence until 1858.

THE MONUMENT.
The assembly, under direction of H. K. Aldous, sang, "High on the Mountain top," and a quartet consisting of Lewis G. Hensland, Wallace Castle, George Bowles and H. K. Aldous, sang a Maori hymn. The invocation and benediction were pronounced by Elders Ezra T. Stevenson and Angus T. Wright, respectively, both ex-presidents of the New Zealand mission.

The monument is of Barre granite from the same Vermont quarry that furnished the shaft of the Prophet Joseph Smith monument at Sharon. It is the work of C. O. Johnson, and bears the following inscription:
"In memory of Hirini Whaanga, born in 1828; died Oct. 17, 1905. A noted chief, a descendant of a long line of chiefs of the Ngatikahungunu tribe of Maoris, the strongest tribe in New Zealand. Reared as a chief and leader; honored as a true Christian; beloved by his friends. Erected by the elders from New Zealand, representing Zion's Maori association of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints, May, 1908."

SALT LAKE HONORS HER SOLDIER DEAD

"O fair young mother! on thy brow Shall sit a nobler grace than now; Deep in the brightness of thy skies Thine angels' troops in glory rise, And as they fleet Drop strength and riches at thy feet!"

Following the exercises Gov. Cutler and staff left for Sandy over the Salt Lake Route to participate there this afternoon in the general exercises.

PARADE ONE FEATURE OF FORMAL PROGRAM

Veterans of two wars and many Indian campaigns mingled with regular troops and national guardsmen in the annual Memorial day parade this morning. With the old soldiers with halting step and bent figure, the younger men assembled to honor the nation's dead. With the troops were many civic organizations met together with the same purpose. Not was the parade composed of men alone. There were women and many of them. Foremost was the feature of the women in the parade was the band composed of members of the circles and corps of the Grand Army of the Republic. Attired in snappy uniforms consisting of dark blue skirts, white shirt waists, canvas leggings and bright buttons, the band of young girls of bright red feathers, this part of the parade was a distinct and unique feature.

Heading the parade was Grand Marshal Alfred Kent, G. A. R., with his aide, Lieut. J. M. McKay. Fifteenth infantry. The first division consisted of troops from Fort Douglas. Major H. A. Arant was in command of the battalion. His aide was Lieut. J. S. Upham. The four companies of infantry from the post were headed by the executive band which is part of the regiment newly come from the Philippines.

The National Guard of Utah was represented by Governor Cutler and staff. Major William A. Bassett, Major Cleveland, late of the Twenty-ninth infantry band, U. S. A., companies H and C of the First Infantry, hospital corps and First Cavalry, Colonel C. S. Plummer was in command of the National Guard contingent with Lieut. H. S. Arns as acting adjutant. Major William A. Bassett commanded the battalion and with him were Lieuts. W. H. Kneass and W. H. Barrett as adjutant and quartermaster respectively. The signal corps was in command of company H, Captain E. L. Bourne of the signal corps, Lieut. J. M. Smith of the First Cavalry, Major Tyndale was in charge of the hospital detachment. In the national guard's section a splendid showing was made by the regimental band, the playing of which was commented upon in complimentary terms all along the line of march. Resplendent in their snappy uniforms with liberal trimmings of orange and white, the signal corps and the guardsmen. This organization, though small in numbers, turned out its full strength and made quite an impression by its good marching and solidly bearing. Escorting the national and regimental colors was company H. This organization was in splendid form and was present in good numbers. Company C was also well represented, the men marching well and showing the effects of good training. The First Cavalry was in force with four sections of breech loading rifles. The untrained horses were handled with skill by the men of this company and the showing made was well received by the crowds along the line of march.

It was in the second division, where were seen the men who fought in the dark days, when rebels and Yankees were not united by the bond which links them as brothers in the united nation today. With halting step, some of them walked, others were bent and feeble. Some were sturdy and still carried themselves as they did when they were shouldering their muskets and marching to meet the foes of the southland. In the eyes of every one, though, was the bright light shining. They were still sturdy soldiers in their hearts and they realized that they were not to do honor to those of their comrades who had fallen in the war or who had been called while peace was on the land after fighting the good fight and in doing the welfare of the nation in its great civil struggle. Then there were younger veterans, veterans of the war of '98. Not so many as in the past, but not unrepresented in this division. To honor the dead of the two wars, of this division, Col. R. G. Sleater was in command. His aide was Capt. A. S. Jarvis. The contingent was headed by the ladies' band of the G. A. R., and their appearance was one of the happy features of the occasion. There was in this division the James B. McKean post, G. A. R., P. E. Connor camp, Sons of Veterans, E. A. Wedgwood camp, Spanish War veterans, and the Black Hawk Indian War veterans.

Of the Third Division Dr. Henry La Roche, late surgeon U. S. N., was in command. Thomas E. Jeremy was personal aide. The division was headed by the cadet companies from All Hallows college and their splendid band, which consisted of a splendid band of the musical line. In their cadet gray uniforms and with their band they made a most favorable appearance and were greeted with a applause throughout the line of march. Following the All Hallows cadets were the cadets from the Salt Lake High school. With them was the High school band. Fresh from their conquests on the coast the appearance of the boys was a welcome part of the parade. Marching with the precision of regulars and in their full dress regalia their passage through the streets was just one other victory added to the list that is already theirs. They carry the Veterans of Salt Lake's first fire department. This familiar part of the parade did full credit to its record in the past and the veterans were liberally applauded in passing. In sharp contrast to them was the fire department of the present day. With glittering brass and shining wood and handsome equipment and fine horses made a splendid showing. The men in neat uniform formed a pleasing part of the display.

Forming in State street the parade marched along Third South street to Main street and to the monument at South Temple street, countermarching to Third South and up to State street, and then north to First South street. At this point the marchers were dismissed and the service in the Orpheum theater followed as the day's next event.

Heading the parade was a platoon of police and Salt Lake's finest with sturdy foot and swinging "bills" did their best to appear formidable. This part of the parade convinced beholders that the "finest" were on hand as usual to maintain their reputation. This they did in fine style.

Heading the national guard division was Gov. Cutler with his staff in carriages. Those in the governor's party were Gen. E. A. Wedgwood, Gen. S. C. Park, Col. H. M. H. Lund, Col. A. S. Bower, Col. A. P. Kessler, Col. G. B. Irvine, Lieut. Col. M. Kessler, Col. G. A. Seaman, Lieut. Col. Miles Taylor, Col. J. A. Greenwood, and Lieut. Col. J. J. Dayne. At the corner of First South and State streets, the governor and party reviewed the national guard.

A pretty compliment paid the National Guard was seen in State street just above Third South street. When the guardsmen arrived at that point they found the ranks of the Fifteenth infantry lined up in two ranks forming a path between them in which the guardsmen passed to march. As the guardsmen passed through the opened ranks the regulars were brought to the "present" in salute. The compliment is one that pleased the guardsmen, and one that has never before been rendered by the regular troops who have been stationed at Fort Douglas. It was appreciated by the guardsmen. It is one more link in the chain of evidence, to use a term much liked by barristers, that the regular forces must rely in time of need. The regular and volunteer troops are being brought more closely together now than in the past and the results in both establishments show the benefits that are being derived from the assumed national control of guardsmen by the general government. The parade in its entirety was a pleasing part of the day's observance.

GRIGUHN AND ARCHIBALD WIN ANNUAL ROAD RACE

THE WINNERS.

FIRST PRIZE—Franz Griguhn, time, 48:16.
TIME PRIZE—Chas. Archibald, time, 47:20.

In spite of threatening weather and the rather rough conditions of the course between Salt Lake and Lagoon, a distance of about 18 miles, the annual Decoration day bicycle road race, an event that has come to stay, and one that is most popular, occurred this morning, the 80 or so amateur riders starting at 10:35.

Although some efforts were made to put a damper on the event, the usual large squadrons of cycle fans was at the starting point and there were as many at the finish to welcome the riders who successfully made the trying ride. The organization train, always one of the features, was not lacking, by any means, and was crowded to the limit.

Manager Rippetto, who has managed the event for several years, made a big success of today's event, and was warmly congratulated for the clean manner in which the race was run. Of course, a road race without spills was at the starting point and there were as many at the finish to welcome the riders who successfully made the trying ride. The organization train, always one of the features, was not lacking, by any means, and was crowded to the limit.

HEART-BREAKING ATHLETIC CONTEST

Philadelphia, May 30.—With anything like favorable conditions there was promise of heart-breaking contests in the finals of the Franklin field at the University of Pennsylvania today. On the form shown in the preliminaries yesterday, Cornell, Pennsylvania and Yale were favorites. Yale yesterday qualified 17 men in the preliminaries, Harvard 16, Pennsylvania 15 and Cornell 14. Each Dartmouth 2, Princeton 3, Michigan 3, Swarthmore 2 and Columbia and Amherst 1 each for the finals. On the general situation Cornell seemed to have slightly the best of it with Pennsylvania a close second and Yale third, but the heavy rain fell during the forenoon and the prospects for record performances are not bright.

BRYAN TOURING NEBRASKA.

Spencer, Neb., May 30.—Wm. J. Bryan began the second day of his Nebraska tour at Spencer, where he arrived at 1:30 this morning from Bonestell, S. D. His address was delivered at the Memorial league meeting for which a large crowd had gathered from surrounding towns. Several hours of time were among those present. This section has seen less of Mr. Bryan than any other part of the state and a generous reception was accorded him. At noon Mr. Bryan started across the country in an automobile. He will speak at Ainsworth and during his speeches today were entirely devoted to memorials to the soldiers and sailors.

Buy the MONARCH It Pays for Itself

Buying a Monarch Range of us is like securing an interest bearing GOLD BOND on such easy terms that after the first small investment is made the interest will carry along the payments—
Because—

The genuine saving of fuel,—of time—of hard, disagreeable labor,—of food, so often spoiled and wasted by the ordinary steel range,—and the delightful satisfaction of having your work perfectly done, amount each month in actual dollars and cents to at least as much as the small payments we ask on one of these remarkable ranges.

You don't have to take our word for these things. Investigate for yourself the way the Monarch is built. See how the Malleable Iron and steel are riveted together, making AIR-TIGHT JOINTS, without the use of "STOVE" wood and glue. See the MONARCH saves fuel and time. See the brightly polished top and body, which will never require any stove blacking and scrubbing. Be satisfied that the Range saves much disagreeable labor. Also notice the Gas-free grate, and the other special features. These things PROVE our statements.

The common sort of steel ranges are WASTEFUL — EXTRAVAGANT — because they are not built in the right way or even of the right kind of material. It is not wise to buy one nor yet to continue using one even though you may have had it only a few years. Its seams have already opened up—the stove bolts worked loose, the putty has fallen out and these "rate leakers" into the flues and firebox cause a waste of fuel every year equal to a large part of the cost of a Monarch.
