They afterwards robbed some freight cars of provisions, distributing them freely. Detectives being sent out after them, they plotted to hoot one of them, for which purpose they hid themselves under the rig Hole bridge, but when their intended victim came along, cheerful and pleasant, their hearts failed them and they refrained from ex-ecuting their fell design. Later they stole two rifles, a couple of fine horses and a favorite dog. Being pursued they had to cross the the Bg Hole River, on which occasion they lost one of their rifles. It ey finally landed in a shaft or tunnel in the hillside, but were brought to bay, called out, and commanded to surrender their remain ing wespon, which they did after some promises of protection.
