evoked more enthusiasm than when Eliza escaped by mpans of a small berg out of the way of the avengers and the bloodhounds. The stage fairly resounded with the barking of the ferocious animals who were supposed to be on Eliza's trail, and when as the result of it all, one little white dog with a ribbon on its neck was brought out and told to "sick 'em," the audi-ence almost doubled up with laughter. The dialogue between Eva and Uncle Tom, most "pathetically" portrayed by John Spencer, was excruciating. B. S. Young, who gave us an Aunt Ophella of the "koochy koochy or-

Aunt Ophella of the "koochy koochy or-der," with a rich Irish brogue, was not less humorous. He lost control of aim-self for one moment when a big bunch of turnips was handed him over the footlights, as John Spencer did when a huge tin wreath surmounted with a small sheaf of wheat was given to him. Though he was in the last threes of dis-solution, Uncle Tom scrambled down to the footlights to secure his crown.
