 FLOATING FRAGMENTS.
 "James Kelley and William Rowshad quite a battle yesterday morning with snakes, in the Platte River bottoms, about two miles from the city. They started out for a walk, and thinking they might see some thing to shoot at, took their revolvers with them, but they were not protective or shooting weapons when dealing with snakes. Walking along through the grass, all at once, within about four feet of them they saw a rattlesnake rear his head and

"The Serf."-To-morrow night, at the Balt Lake Theatre, a performance will be given by Lindsay's Dramatic Company, recently returned from a professional tour in the South. The play selected for the occasion is a universal favorite wherever presented, being from the pen of that gifted dramatic anthor, Tom Taylor. It is entitled "The Berf, or Love Levels All." It will doubtless be put upon the stage in a highly creditable manner."

Brown as a Bruiser .-- Last night a stranger to the town wrapped himself around an immoderate quantity of intoxicants, and became very belligerent and bolsterons. He called himself a bad name, and no-
