

ment, if not more so. He is possessed, noisy public and a successful merchant. Fortunately, however, a meeting house, which he opens to the Indians and offers assistance in holding meetings there.

Brother Webster tells us more friends, and especially Indians among the Cherokee. This is the true Mountain nation, living here now, which has, in a few years, sprung up like mushrooms. There are many houses, stores and other buildings, while on the right is an acre or two covered with cotton fields, this being a cotton-growing district. A river, this particular one, flows westward to the Arkansas river. The first fort being taken in the ice, we were cut over by a Cherokee boy on a skis. This river is fully a quarter of a mile wide. A small town, the name of which we know not, was our friend's brother, R. D. Moxley, who had come twenty miles to take us to his home, which is at the western end of the valley, about a mile and a half from the Arkansas river. We pass over the rolling hills through the hollows, among the scrubby timber, and are soon in the open prairie, the monotony of which is only broken here and there by a little rise of the ground and a small stream along which grows a few trees. The prairie extends far to the east, and across the eye can reach a strip of timber bordering the Arkansas river. To the right, and reaching to the south, is a wide valley, a mile wide, a mile long, and crossing the "Owyhee river." We pass over the rolling hills through the hollows, among the scrubby timber, and are soon in the open prairie, the monotony of which is only broken here and there by a little rise of the ground and a small stream along which grows a few trees. The prairie extends far to the east, and across the eye can reach a strip of timber bordering the Arkansas river. To the right, and reaching to the south, is a wide valley, a mile wide, a mile long, and crossing the "Owyhee river."

Having crossed the prairie and passed our southern limit on the Owyhee river, we were soon in between the Cherokee and Choctaw nations; we are again among the rolling hills and timber, with a few more trees, and across the eye can reach a strip of timber bordering the Arkansas river. To the right, and reaching to the south, is a wide valley, a mile wide, a mile long, and crossing the "Owyhee river."

The grape vines and honey-suckles cling to the trees, and here and there a few blossoms separate from the trunk a hundred feet high, and hang like ropes and rigging of a ship. In the summer time, however, the vines are bare, and the grapes are gone. As the sun was just rising behind the western horizon, we arrived at our "Indian home." On a little elevation, rising from the Canadian prairie, the Indian village was connected by an open entry. A chimney is placed at the outer end of each room, and the doors open into the hall. A mud floor is an ornament, and, running out for half a mile, is a productive farm.

Eight years ago, Apostle Testale and Elder Dalton were in the Cherokee nation, and I was a boy. Later on while Elder Felt was accompanied Elder Dalton, they were strongly impressed to follow out the impressions received through the agency, which is the offshoot of the "apostle" who had appeared to Brother Dalton, clothed in white, who, warning his hand to the south reported three Indians in the river, over the river, go over the river; they are now waiting for you."

In the spring of 1884 they crossed the Arkansas river, and found in the Cherokee nation a people in a state of dream. The Queen and leader of the party, a Cherokee lady, was my dear friend and sister Sister Moxley. Brother Moxley, too, had been a man of great influence in his father's household followed. And since the day S. G. Moxley opened his doors to the Indians he has been greatly honored. And since that day he has given freely his suggestions and assistance to the Cherokee boys, and provides full and vegetables to eat instead of animal food.

The Indians had come home from their various fields the Cherokee, Choctaw and Chickasaw nations, to meet us at our appointed time and place. They were all dressed in their national costumes, and their families remained at Moxley, where they are continually engaged in making preparations to build a meeting house. We left them well and happy, full and enjoying the spirit of their mission.

Elder Merrill, preceding Elder here, who has been in the field a considerable time, is so much of a Cherokee that he is almost an Indian in expression and movement. The Cherokee is kindly to him. The Indian looks to old men for counsel. Elder Merrill is growing a beard to gain experience of age and nature, rugged fellow full of life, vigor and health, the same as we know him in Covington, Utah, Elder Shadley and our own, Emanuel, the latter. He looks like a King. Elder Felt and Elder Peters were quite tired, having just walked forty miles over rough, sandy roads to camp here in the mountains. The weather is very cold. Weather is rather inclement, however. Elder Peters is just as happy as when surrounded by a group of merry young children at home. He thinks about the old days in the hills. Still, Elder Peters, except that he has had one of his ears frozen, causing the injured member to look a little shorter than the other, is in good spirits. Uncle Nelsie and Aunt Sally, Little Johnny and Elder are always happy and cheerful when the boys return from their trips.

For the time we have abandoned the Cherokee field. Recently a new interest has been awakened. Our friends were anxious we would not return to the field, so they sent letters of inquiry about the "Mormon" Indians, and want them to come out and stay all winter, and not wait till spring. Many Indians are anxious to come down to the warm weather, especially those living above the snow line in the winter.

The Cherokee Indian money is the best in the country, number of investments and savings savings. The Cherokee nation, an entire new place of safety, money well invested in Indian land. Exchange banks have been established, and we do. Cherokee, etc. These men and their wives and children are the greatest of the real mining districts. On the part of the Indians, there is a warm sympathy from the people thus far. The Indians who will continue their labors to that section of the country, will in all probability be the ones who will support the country and the mission as the work develops.
