WASHES OUT HIS STOMACH.

A Salt Lake Whim Doctor Had Gone Up to Die.

One With a Stomach Disease He nearly Ended His Life.

Washing out the stomach is a procedure that has been thought out by the modern school of physicians, and there are many who stand high in the medical profession who have not adopted it as a part of their practice in dealing with certain stomach diseases. In Salt Lake, however, where the physicians are in the van of progress in medical studies, there are a number who handle the process with skill and efficiency.

But doctors, like other mortals, are not omniscient, and sometimes they meet with cases of bodily disorder whose symptoms or complications prove a puzzle. This was the case in connection with the recent illness of J. C. Jensen, well known to Salt Lake as the manager, until a few months ago, of the Security Abstract company.

Mr. Jensen has been troubled for about ten years with what is commonly called indigestion, presumably brought on by the use of cold beverages. For a number of years he obtained relief when the attacks came on by dieting himself, but about a year ago this disease became collective, and his health began failing rapidly. He got into a low state of physical vigor but a few weeks ago, when lying still, he had all the appearance of a corpse. A medical change has been made, and, from a more stable condition he has rallied to almost his former self.

In recollecting his experience lately, Mr. Jensen said: "When I began attacking about a year ago, I could not eat, but I could drink, and this aggravated the case. Last March, a collapse came on and I had to stop. I was confined to my bed the greater part of the time for over four months. I tried the best physicians in the city, but without success. Then I tried Dr. Felt, and him again, but notwithstanding their skill and care, everything that was ate in my stomach remained, and I gradually grew worse. One who was staying with me advised me to return to my former physician, Dr. Felt, and I did so. I need not expect to go to work again for he did not think I could last three months.

"Another physician whom I seen for a little while, told me what he could, but failing to find what would give me an outlet to live, I realized myself that I was in a pretty bad condition. When I looked in the glass I could see that I was about as yellow as a gnat, and my suffering was very great. I then turned to Dr. Price, and whatever food or drink was taken into my stomach for nourishment soured and added to my trouble. I had taken an emetic, which gave me an outlet, but I did not tell Dr. Felt all about it, so he would not tell me my policy for $4000 he would telegraph the company asking them to make such a bargain, but for fear some in a week I would be dead, and that they would have to pay the full sum.

"H. H. Bailey solicited me to resign him to the principalities of the Death school, at his own request, at a salary of $100 a month to teach in the Lorain school, that his salary be not increased, and that he be given $100 per month, which I was willing to do, with no hope of discovering something even at the last moment that would relieve me. I was told that my trouble was indigestion. I should not have been so foolish, and I did not know that Dr. Felt was affiliated with that institution. I was told that my trouble was indigestion, and I could feel the sensation of feeling that my stomach would partly fold over and shut up.

"It was finally suggested to me that I was to wash my stomach, either by water or washed out with a strong solution contrived for that purpose. At first I did not relish the idea, but I soon gave in, and my doctor said, 'I know that to wash out my bowels, I am afraid you will be sick again.' So I thought that my throat would cause me to vomit, and I did not know what to do. I took a cathartic, and then I lay down on my stomach, and I poured down my throat for two feet, into my stomach.

"But I was so ill, and annoyed by the statement of Dr. Cady, of Dr. Felt, that I did not have time without music, movement, and rest, and became greatly troubled, I decided to try. I thought that if a delicate woman could manage it, I would save a stomach. After a while I was able to get up and walk around, and I took a cathartic, and then I lay down on my stomach, and then I poured in the water, to which had been added a little salt.

"I poured about three quarts of water into the bowel, and on this I was able to walk around. The water went down below the level of my stomach, and the solution began to operate. The water, food, and everything else that was in my stomach was set free, and I was able to walk. After the first time I was not sick at all, except at the toilet, and it soon came to be quite easy.

"The washing went on daily for sometime. Then I did it less frequently, and when I was able to walk around, and think I need it. From three quarts of water while the stomach contained at first, the quantity was reduced to one quart. Then I did not get up, and the cathartics had to remain in its nostrils.

"I can not say now, that I feel good now, and I do not complain. My digestion has become very good, and I feel better than ever. I have done a great deal of walking, and think I need it. The other day I lost 10 lbs., which had given me a week to live, and I have gained 10 lbs. since. I feel good now.

"He made no other comment.

"The process of washing out the stomach by the colonic process isn't anything new, but it is a new method as I am informed. A rubber pipe is put into the rectum, and many people afflicted with constipation, and I believe most of them could be cured by the washing out process. It works a great change in our condition.
