At this place I separated from my companion, Elder J. A few rowdies tried to disturb the meeting, but were unsuccessful. We had a few missiles thrown at us after we got out in the dark, one shaved my whiskers, and the brother with me had his hat knocked off. I gave the audience an opportunity to ask questions. Many availed themselves of the privilege. A reporter present made many inquiries, and returning to the house of Brother Pearson, two gentlemen told me they were edified and had learned many things, and pronounced it a very interesting and intelligent lecture. I gave notice that L would deliver another lecture on Sunday. The Chicago Tribune says Mr. Jay Gould has obtained control of the Michigan Central road through a majority of its stock, and adds, "Mr. Gould now controls a continous line from Buffalo to Ogden. He only needs the Erie and the Central Pacific to complete a great through line. The former will pass into his hands before long, as he has been buying up its stock for some time. As to the latter, he can make arrangements with the managers as satisfactory as if he controlled it himself. It has to depend on his lines, as it has no other castern connections, and must therefore harmonize with him."
