The fitting out of several iron clads has no other significance than the desire of the Navy Department to save them from decay, to which vessels out of commission are exposed.

Washington.—To-day Senators Sherman and Sumner visited Senator Sprague, to suggest the basis of a settlement of his difficulty with Senator Abbott. While conversing Senator Poole entered with a letter from Abbott reciting the language used by Sprague in his speech in which the story of the "mastiff and the mongrel puppy" was used to illustrate a point, demanding whether Sprague intended to apply this offensive language to him. Sprague wrote a reply which he placed in the hands of Senator Sumner who, with Sherman and Poole, visited Abbott with authority to deliver the letter upon Abbott's withdrawal of certain language he applied to Sprague. Sprague's note said the paragraph cited was written before the delivery of the speech in the Senate and before Abbott's participation in the debate, therefore it was not intended to apply to Abbott. This, Abbott replied, was entirely satisfactory, and therefore asked Sprague to consider his allusion to Sprague in the Senate as unsaid. This closed the correspondence.
