Emperor William has made a proclamation to the effect that all the Protestant churches in Russia are to celebrate the 300th birthday of Gustavus Adolphus, the famous Swedish king, December 9th. The clergymen have been ordered in their sermons on that date to pay homage to the great moral character of the Swedish king and also make a description of his sacrificing work in the interest of protestantism in Germany.

A great winter sport in Sweden is snow-shoeing than which the whole world can show no grander or healthier sport. It is fully national in the north of Sweden, where all men and women alike, are at home on their snow-shoes. Of late years too snow-shoeing has been revived by the efforts of amateur clubs in central Sweden, and annual contests are held at Stockholm and elsewhere in racing, jumping and other tests of skill. The lengths of the jumps inclusive varies from twenty to sixty or even seventy feet, and the perpendicular falls sustained in the course of such a jump are equal to the height of a two-story house.

OBITUARY NOTES.

EMILY CORDON.

Died at Willard City, Box Elder county, Utah, Nov. 15, 1894, Emily, wife of the late Bishop Alfred Cordon.

Deceased was born at Coventry, Warwickshire, England, March 30, 1828, being the daughter of George and Harriet Pridmore. She became a member of the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints in 1847, and emigrated to Utah in 1855. Soon after arriving in this Territory she was married to Alfred Cordon, to whom she bore one daughter and three sons; two of the latter live at Rigby, Bannock Stake, Idaho, one of whom is Bishop of that place. The other two still reside at Willard.

Through a life of trials, privations, widowhood, and frequent sickness, the light of the Gospel illumined her pathway and she constantly pressed forward with eternal life and celestial glory in view.

During the last summer she has been very anxious to complete her work in the House of God, and for this purpose she recently went to Logan, returning on the 10th inst, after which she remarked to many friends that she was now ready to depart.

For some years she has been subject to spells under which she would lose control of herself, and do things of which, after returning to her normal condition, she could remember nothing. On the 15th instant she started from home to see a neighbor and, it is supposed, one of those spells came on, and she fell face downward into the water ditch, where her body was shortly afterwards found, her spirit having gone to that rest for which she so ardently longed and which she so truly merited.

Tried 'er as gold seven times by fire,
She bore it all with resolute will;
Surrounded oft by dangers dire,
Her guardian angels watched her still.

Her earthly mission now complete,
The Father said, "Come, daughter, come."
"Thy will be done," her lips repeat,
And angels gently bore her home.

JAMES J. CHANDLER.
