bury for her to do so. The hands begin to age at 20, and there is no greater telltale of a woman's age than hands not properly cared for.

The woman whose hands are short and thick, whose nails look as if they had been chopped off with a coupon clipper, has much to contend with. She arouses antagonism the moment any one looks at her hands. Without well-groomed hands, a woman is unclass; she can not possibly impress one as being refined. And, after all, well-groomed hands are merely a question of care.

Women nowadays are beginning to realize that pretty hands are second only in charm to a pretty face; a pretty hand is not fat and pudgy, as so many people think, nor is it necessarily dimpled.

Whether the skin be white or tanned to a deep brown by the rays of the sun, it must be smooth and firm and well cared for. Even a bony hand, under these conditions, is attractive to look at, and 10 minutes devoted each day to the care of the hands and nails will reap a rich reward.

Harper's Bazar, for which Henry James writes on manners, worth writes on the hands, Bishop Potter writes on morals, and President Eliot of Harvard writes on education, has now persuaded Horace Fletcher to write on his new diet system. In the August Bazar Mr. Fletcher says:

"Mothers, wives, and housekeepers interested in fitching in more ways than are others. Housekeeping is enormously simplified and much expense is saved. Husbands who ditcherize faithfully lose taste for alcoholic drinks until finally there is body-intoxication of excessive alcohol. The practice brings health, patience and general amiability, if not in perfection, at least in agreeably modified form. Even when husbands are in temperate in their aversion to drinking alcoholic, greater amiability is sure to be the result of temperate eating.

"There is little fear of under-nourishment as a result of attention to fitching. It is, however, danger of overdoing the reform itself. Professor Irving Fisher guarded against the rules which governed his famous experiment at New Haven."

We must mention the return to favor of long chains, saunters, and other form of neckwear. The saunters, usually secure a small change purse which is slipped into a vest or belt pocket, the chain hanging in double loops in a decidedly mannish fashion. Then, too (what seems still more of a novelty), there are some pretty new neck chains with open ends, which consist of twisted strands of beads, ten or more strands being twisted into one. These are finished at the ends with long, full bead tassels. Such necklaces are simply thrown around the shoulders, the tassels depending in the front to about the waist line.

Practically all little boys' suits this year are made with full-knee knickerbockers and belted blouses or jackets. In all instances the belts are loose and low. Little girls' skirts all flare from the waist and some a little below the knee. Where belted, the stiff belts are set low and are worn perfectly loose. For trimming crash suits cotton Amazon braid and fancy narrow tapes are used. Peary buttons or bone ones of simple form are all that is necessary. Boy's collars—and, for that matter, those for little girls may be managed in exactly the same way—are now provided with underloops in the back; the blouse is then supplied with buttons to correspond with these loops, and, thus secured, the collar is guaranteed to hold in place over throughout a really strenuous game. The little blouse plumes that button on the shoulders or just slip over the head are most useful because so easily laundered.

A MIDSUMMER ATHLETE.

The girl who goes in strenuously for athletics, especially the one who wins prizes in tennis tournament week, takes care to provide herself with a roomy shirtwaist of the sort which will absorb moisture. Trim little blouses somewhat of the Peter Pan order are developed of mohair or rough silk. They are tailor finished and have soft turnover collar and cuffs. Usually these blouses are in shades to correspond with one or the other of the colors in the striped mohair or serge outing skirt.
