

WHY COLE YOUNGER, BANDIT, IS BELOVED.

In 1876 Cole Younger was one of a band of Missouri brigands who failed in an attempt to rob the bank at Northfield, Minn. The other day a telegram from St. Paul announcing the pardon of Younger and his return to Missouri was considered of sufficient importance to be read from the clerk's desk to the Missouri house of representatives at Jefferson City. It was greeted with joyous applause.

When Younger returns to his old home and haunts in Jackson county, Missouri—the superbly beautiful and wealthy and populous county in which has been reared Kansas City—he will be greeted with cheers and tears.

Christian people will crowd about him to press the hand that helped make Missouri a synonym with American brigandage.

He will be more than a hero. He will be a hero returned from the grave.

All this appears inexplicable, weird, sixteenth-century-like to the people of the east and north. They can account for it in no way save that the people of Missouri believe that the robber on horseback is a noble figure.

And it seems a strange and wonderful thing, although perfectly plain to those who understand the sentiment that made heroes of the James boys and the Youngers and which protected and cherished them while they robbed and murdered.

It is as difficult for a man from Boston to understand the sanity of the south's rage over the presence of the negro, Booker T. Washington, at President Roosevelt's table as it is for him to comprehend the worship of Missouri's train robbers. Not that there is any similarity between the phenomena named except that they are a part of the same thing, a part of the same thing which have a clear origin which the northern eye is unable to see.

If there had been no civil war in the United States—indeed, if there had been no civil war within a civil war in Missouri—there would have been no James boys and Youngers in the realm of the glorification of crime.

Those robbers on horseback existed solely in the fervor and force of a sentiment which only the death of the generation in whose hearts it was rooted could destroy.

To the north the battle was far off. The south was trampled by the march of armies, but they were armies that marched by in companies, regiments, brigades.

In Missouri, particularly in Jackson county, the war was on the doorstep and by the flash of a solitary rifle in the darkness, it was a war between neighbors and a war between bordering states.

Northern and southern soldiers could fight great battles and succor each other's wounded and swap food and tobacco across the trenches when the fight lulled. But the men who know each other by name and fought could not feel sweet charity.

Black crimes were committed in the ghostly masquerade of war by parties of twos and threes.

On the one bloody hand was the Lawrence massacre when Quantrell and his quasi-soldiers, and demagogues, part cut-throat, part hero, made terrible repatrials for the red furies of the Kansas "Red Legs" into Jackson county. On the other bloody hand was the terrible "Order No. 11," whereby a federal general ordered the depopulation of the bare but war-torn country. Women and children were driven from their homes by federal troops. They saw through their tears the flames burst from the family roof. Children remembered as long as they lived the death of a favorite cat or calf. Perhaps the old dog attacked the intruders and was killed by a bayonet thrust before their eyes.

And with all this was the difference in brothers' blood—a difference as strong and evident as that time as the difference in the cousins' blood of Englishmen and Americans.

The broader hatreds between north and south were to this thing as the taste of bitterness to the poison dregs.

When a lot of drunken American men-of-war's men go drifting in a foreign city way, of course, that it's disgraceful. But you would feel worse about the unfortunate affair if the sailors failed to fight desperately.

Indeed, can you help a feeling of satisfaction if the news is that the American blue jackets wiped up the historic pave with the foreign police and were only quelled when literally sat upon by overwhelming numbers?

Let's go a little further and suppose that war arose between the Americans and British in the northwest territory. The British would call the Americans a pack of desperadoes. They would let no crime by their American enemies go unheralded to show their true character.

Even though the Americans were wrong and a sure tough outfit, would you feel bad if they whipped the Canadian mounted police?

Suppose that the Canadian military finally put them down. Go closer. Suppose that you were an American living on the scene of conflict.

Now we come to an understandable parallel. Suppose that you had been an American sympathizer but had taken no part in the fight.

But the war is over. The Americans have ceased the unequal struggle. However, a few of the most desperate remain in the fastnesses in arms.

They begin to live by brigandage. Their deeds terrorize the country. They are reported by the discomfited Canadian police to be invincible fighters. The police can't cope with them.

If one of these desperadoes—of your own blood and nation—came to your home to escape the officers, would you reveal him to them? Would you join in the hunt to take the "bugey"?

And then let us suppose that the gang was finally broken up and that nearly 30 years afterward one of the remaining brigands returned to his old haunts pardoned. How would you act toward him?

Takes these questions to yourself and you can understand the cheers and tears for Cole Younger, bandit, in Missouri.—Denver Post.

CRUELTY AND DRUNKENNESS

These the Grounds Upon Which Martha A. Burns Seeks Divorce.

HUSBAND'S DIRE THREATS.
Said He Would Take Her Life if She Attempted to Get a Decree of Separation.

Mrs. Martha A. Burns has filed suit in the district court for divorce against her husband, Andrew C. Burns, an employee of the Salt Lake City Brewing company, on the grounds of cruelty and habitual drunkenness. The parties were married in this city on May 12, 1890, and it is alleged that for the past 10 years defendant has been guilty of habitual intemperance and, when under the influence of liquor, has, on various occasions, treated his wife in a cruel manner, calling her vile and offensive names and threatening to take her life if she attempted to get a divorce from him.

Owing to the threats of her husband and his many acts of cruelty toward her and her children, Mrs. Burns alleges that she is fearful of her life and can no longer live with him as his wife. She asks to be awarded a divorce and the custody of their six children; to be decreed to be the owner of their home, together with the furniture and improvements, valued in the aggregate at about $1,500; that her husband pay a reasonable sum for her support and costs of suit, and $200 attorney's fee; and that he be restrained from interfering with her in any way, or from going to her residence, or from interfering with anything contained therein, or from doing anything to the injury of herself and children. A temporary restraining order was issued in the case by Judge Moore.

GEORGE A. LOWE'S ESTATE.
Appraisers File Inventory Placing Its Value at $153,000.

In the matter of the estate of George A. Lowe, deceased, Judge Hall has ordered a family allowance of $500 per month paid for the maintenance of the family. W. S. McCormick, M. B. Sowies and W. J. Root, the appraisers of the estate, filed an inventory showing the total value of the estate to be $153,155.98. The total indebtedness of the estate is $112,429.30, and the net value $39,719.68.

Anna Peters Sued.
R. M. Gurnsey has filed suit in the district court against Anna Peters, administratrix of the estate of Max A. Peters, deceased, and Otto Glaser to recover $292.07 alleged to be due for merchandise sold to defendants and for rent, license and porter's wages paid at the request of defendants between Nov. 23, 1901, and April 19, 1902.

COURT NOTES.
Axel E. Hokanson, by Gust Hokanson his guardian ad litem, has filed a suit in the district court against the Pleasant Valley Coal company, the Utah Fuel company and D. J. Sharp to recover $1,500 damages for personal injuries received on Sept. 17, 1902, in a collision with one of defendant's coal wagons near the corner of Second South and Second West streets. Plaintiff alleges that he was driving in a light buggy when a coal wagon, driven by an employee of defendant, collided with the buggy and threw plaintiff violently to the ground, breaking his leg.

Catherine M. Sheldrove has filed an injunction suit in the district court against Salt Lake City and F. M. Ulmer, city building inspector, to prevent them from tearing down a fence or screen about 10 feet in height which she had constructed on her own private premises directly east of her residence to protect said dwelling and the interior thereof from public and private view. The city council has passed an ordinance limiting the height of fences and, the fence in controversy is above the height provided in the ordinance, the building inspector was instructed to remove it. Judge Hall issued an order to show cause in the case filed by Mrs. Sheldrove returnable on Thursday, March 5.

Judge Hall today rendered a decree in favor of defendants in the case of John J. Lusk vs. John F. Byron and wife, quieting their title to part of the southwest quarter of section 2, township 2 south, range 1 west.

Sarah J. Grov has filed a petition for letters of administration of the estate of Theodore M. Grov, deceased, who died on March 22, 1902, leaving an estate consisting of real property valued at $15,000. The petition will be heard by Judge Hall on March 23.

NEW FORESTRY MANUAL.
A manual of forestry, written especially for the farmers and other land-owners of southern New England, will be published in a few weeks by the Bureau of Forestry. It is to be called "The Woodlot," and it will tell so simply and clearly how to treat the forest land of the three states with which it deals—Connecticut, Massachusetts and Rhode Island—that even the landowner with no knowledge of forestry will be able to learn from it enough to improve his timber.

The Bureau of Forestry for several years has given personal assistance in the field to timber-land owners who wished to manage their forests conservatively. Agents of the bureau have made plans for the management of many thousands of acres, a good part of which was in the southern New England states. "The Woodlot" is a result of these field studies of southern New England timber lands. The various kinds of forest growth in Massachusetts, Connecticut, and Rhode Island have been reduced to a few simple types, so clearly described that an owner who knows the names of his trees and the conditions under which they are growing, will be able easily to place the timber lot under one of the types described. For each type of forest a plan of management is prescribed, illustrated by diagrams.

"The Woodlot" was written by Prof. Henry S. Graves, director of the Yale forestry school, and Mr. R. T. Fisher, of the Bureau of Forestry.
