Sanpete and Sevier counties have but just got fairly started to plant, and it seem difficult to get the farmers in some localities to realize the necessity of taking advantage of all conditions in praparing their land as it should be for this crop. Mr Austin says, however, that the farmers of Utah and Salt Lake counties as a rule have done everything in their power to prepare their land in first class condition—better than ever before for this crop. From present prospects there will be very good stands of beets on most of the land.
