EVENING NEWS.

May 22, 1876.

THE DYING PRISONER.

BY HARRY S. MELVILLE.

It rains so hard this gloomy night,
The iron floor is freezing cold;
What thoughtless here so chill and white,
This shameful heavy heart to hold?
I think, and think, and cannot tell:
I've been a wretched prisoner, ten years,
And why I left I never could recall.
You must not ask me—ask these tears
I've had to strain and weep and dream
About my life and what I've done:
They always stopped my thoughts to roam,
And blood in veins will never run,
So, when I'll not die to live!
And yet I do not wish to die,
Pity me—Time, a pardon give,
And do not let death come so nigh!

Eight years ago not far from here,
I went to school and had a hope,
I left the heart with all so dear,
The thorny paths of vice to roam.
While building castles in the air,
I never dreamed that death stood
With light to blast my happy face,
And that pure virtue in the flood.

The night before I ran away,
My father took me on his knee;
He said me that he wished to say
Some words to me before I went;
He asked me if I was not good,
And I said I was not bad;
And I said I would be good,
And I said I would be good.

My memory has begun to fail,
My heart is heavy and my face
Is pale and thin and my eyes are
Deeply sunken and my hair is
Graying and my hands are
Shaking and my feet are
Cold and my heart is
Sinking and my soul is
Leaving me and my body
Is left to rot and decay.

The English of Deaf Mutes.

With tremendous acids against him, the deaf mute child is set to the task of acquiring a knowledge of written language. His ideas in signs—shape themselves in his hand, and he is not aware of the fact that the world does not think these words. The idea of a horse, its shape and color, is present in his mind, or if the horse is not present to his sight, the sign which he uses for that animal comes into his thoughts, and he is not aware of the fact that the world does not think these words. The idea of a horse, its shape and color, is present in his mind, or if the horse is not present to his sight, the sign which he uses for that animal comes into his thoughts, and he is not aware of the fact that the world does not think these words.
