

Social Position of Artists in France.

THEY are by no means frivolous or trivial in their artistic lives. The recently maintained academic standards of France in all matters of fine art compel them to a degree of technical excellence which nothing but hard, prolonged, wholehearted work can attain. Keen, critical scrutiny combines with incessant competition, on all sides, to keep them unrelentingly devoted to their task. Whether they submit to academic convention or rebel against it, the case is the same. As artists, they are as intensely and as seriously devoted to their duties as university professors are to theirs. You cannot know Frenchmen anywhere, in fact, without reverent acknowledgment of their inexhaustible industry. The moment you find yourself among artists of the better sort, furthermore, you cannot fail to be impressed by the fervent earnestness of their artistic purpose. Whatever the results of their efforts they give themselves to their art with all their hearts. Like any other human beings, they fall into little groups, schools, sets, among themselves, each with its virtues and vices, its power and its limitations. Yet somehow, as you contemplate French society in its entirety, in its general structure, the artists, as a class, seem distinctly apart from anybody else.

They are not aristocrats; they are not bourgeois. They are as good gentlemen as either; and as honest men. But they form a kind of separate class, so distinct from the others—and often so far from instant sympathy with the others—that you can hardly help feeling their temper concerning the others to be tinged rather with defiance than with cordiality. Apparently, at the same time, they have a society of their own as firm and as systematic in its structure as that of the aristocracy or that of the bourgeoisie—mingling on its frontier with each, yet definitely different. Analogies in such cases are apt to be misleading, and it is invidious. Yet I can find no better means of indicating the position which artists, as a class, seem to occupy than by comparing it with that of the professional artists—themselves, artists, in their own kind, of great importance.—Professor Wendell, in Scribner.

They were selecting the jury the other day for the trial of a will case in Judge Strimling's court. Michael Graham, a West Side grocer, was on the stand, and Judge Noble was asking the usual formal questions to determine his qualifications to sit as a juror in this particular case.

"Your name?" asked Judge Noble.

"Michael Graham, sir."

"And your occupation?"

"I'm a grocer, sir."

Squire, Sanders & Dempsey represented the other side in court, and Judge Noble, continuing his questions, asked: "Have you ever done business with Squire, Sanders & Dempsey?"

"No, sir," said the witness emphatically. "I buy all my goods of William Edwards & Son."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A HUGE SALE OF ALL
Ladie's Tailored Suits
A WEEK OF APPALLING PRICE-CUTS

MONDAY has been assigned as the day to commence the immediate and unconditional clearance of SUITS.

There have been a number of sales of Tailored Suits in Salt Lake this season, and some wonderful stories have been told of the values offered and the numbers of garments disposed of. We go on record this morning, however, with the assertion that at no other time in any other store has there been so remarkable a collection of handsome, stylish garments as are represented in this sale. And all our fine Suits must be disposed of this week. We urge you to attend this sale at once, not only because of the prices that will prevail, but that you may make selections from a stock such as will never be again this season. No dilly-dalliness on our part, and there can be none on yours if you would be among those benefited. Monday begins the greatest Salt Lake Sale Salt Lake has ever experienced. We are going at it with all the strength of purpose and organization at our command.
