

THE GOSPEL TO THE MAORI.

An Interesting Narrative—Continued in Pages of Opening the Mission.

POKAREKARE, Idaho,
April 24th, 1896.

To the Editor:

During the past thirteen years I have read in the Deseret News and other Church publications letters and reports of returned missionaries, about the work among the natives of that far off land, New Zealand. Many times I have thought I would like to see in connection with the opening of that mission, and nothing another error in your Semi-Weekly of March 15th, has left me with the impression that the opening of the correct date of the opening of that mission. If you think they are worthy of publication or any part of them, please do so.

The work among the natives commenced with success, in the town of Cambridge, Waikato, one hundred miles south of Auckland on December 24th, 1883 (and not in 1885 as stated) by Elder William M. Bromley, president of the Australasian mission, William J. McDowell, who was a student of Cambridge, and Thomas L. Coe, a student of the place where the work commenced. These two brothers had come to pay a visit. Elder Bromley being specially invited to pay a visit to the natives on the mission of the latter after breakfast, we all spent the forenoon among the natives, and arranged for a meeting with them at the same time. The meeting was held at the house of a chief named Hare Teimana. A large number of natives had been notified of the meeting and the house was crowded. It appeared to be the intention, the meeting was continued until a late hour, so much so that my wife began to think something was wrong as we had not returned home.

Before leaving, we arranged for another meeting to be held on the evening of the 15th. On the morning of the 15th, we had a very good time. Before we had got far we were called back by the chief, who told us that the natives had been notified of the meeting and the house was crowded. It appeared to be the intention, the meeting was continued until a late hour, so much so that my wife began to think something was wrong as we had not returned home.

MIDDLE TENNESSEE.

Interesting Report From Elder J. C. Young.

May 10th, 1896.

To the Editor:

I have just returned from a very pleasant trip through Middle Tennessee, where I have been preaching the Gospel for several weeks. The work has been very successful, and many souls have been converted. I have been very much pleased with the progress of the mission, and I am confident that the work will continue to prosper.
