

SOP FOR THE MILK DEALERS ON MENU

City Council Placates Wholesale Men With a Reduction in License Fees.

ARMSTRONG FILLS VACANCY.

Is Appointed Member of the Board of Public Works Vice Sam M. Barlow Who Was "Promoted."

No more municipal history will be made by the city council during the present year at least in regular session, as the last meeting of the year passed into history last night with adjournment.

There was nothing the least bit exciting about the meeting of last night, and the thought apparently uppermost in the mind of every member present, was to "get it over with" as soon as possible. There was nothing more exciting before the body than the consideration of the milk licenses, although up till the time of meeting it was supposed that Councilman Armstrong had in contemplation the recall of a resolution, tabled at long time, providing for an investigation of the mystery surrounding the disappearance of the fireman's fund. The demand for the recall of the resolution was not forthcoming, although it is understood that the first regular meeting of the new year will witness its appearance.

T. J. ARMSTRONG APPOINTED.

The name of T. J. Armstrong was submitted by Mayor Bransford to fill the vacancy in the board of public works created by the withdrawal of present Chief of Police Barlow. His appointment of the mayor was concurred in by the council, and Mr. Armstrong duly appointed to the position.

Under a perfect volley of protests from the milk dealers both wholesale and retail, an ordinance cutting down their license fees had been prepared, and under suspended rules was hurried through its three readings and declared spread upon the statutes of the city. By this ordinance the fees charged milk dealers are reduced from $3 to $1 for those known as wholesalers, and for those who sell five gallons a day or less, and the retailers will pay $1.50 for the sale of less than five gallons. The old ordinance called for the same license fee from both retailer and wholesaler.

DIFFERENT PROTECTION.

When the ordinance providing for the quality of standard of milk, butter and cream offered for sale was brought up, Councilman John Holly protested earnestly against its passage, without naming anything that seemed to be radically wrong with the measure proposed. Everyone wanted to go home anyway, and no concerted effort was therefore made to push the passage of the measure, which was laid over for further action at the next regular meeting.

Max A. Jaensch applied wearily for a liquor license, having applied many times before, and the action of the council contained nothing new or novel, as it turned down the application as of yore.

It was believed by many that the example set by property owners of Fourth East and Sixth East, in protesting against the parking system, would be followed by those of Seventh East, but it was not, and there were no protests heard.

THOSE EXCAVATIONS.

The ordinance for which L. D. Martin is responsible, which prohibits the excavations of buildings approaching the curb line more nearly than four feet, and which also prohibits excavations under the intersections of streets, passed its final reading, and became a law. Under its provisions, before a cellar may be excavated, or any underground work done in building operations, afterwards, a permit must be obtained.

This ordinance, however, does not carry with it the right on the part of the city to charge a real estate rental for space occupied beneath the surface of the ground, as was proposed should be policy of the government some weeks ago. Mr. Martin generously admitted that the merchant was at present paying taxes on about everything in sight, and that it would be unjust to try to dig up something new to charge him for. It has been intimated in other circles that the only reason this underground rental, or tax was not made a part of the ordinance, was owing to the fact that legal advice was to the effect that there was no method, short of the "Rocky Mountain" system, whereby it could be collected. The council adjourned till tomorrow night, instead of Thursday night, for the consideration of matters in the hands of the committees.

the report has not materially changed since the reports of 1907 were made. In this connection, the writer makes special mention of the fact that the personnel of the guard has changed almost completely since the report of last year, owing to the fact that the paper enlistment has been practically done away with and a working force substituted. The average membership of officers and enlisted men is shown to be 370.6 for 1907, during which year 39 drills were held, showing average strength present of 49. During the year covered by the present report, 42 drills were held, showing an average strength present of 60.71.

Company H showed the highest percentage of any organization for the year, its standing being $1.45 per cent. The First battery, F. A. was excused by the commander-in-chief from field duty during the summer, which lowered the average per cent materially. The average membership of the year for officers and men is given at 290.8. The average of the strength as prescribed by the president of the Dick bill is shown as 70.6 per cent. This is with the exception of the signal corps and battery. The attendance at the government inspection was 78.14, per cent. The signal corps shows the highest percentage at $1.51 per cent, the band being second with $0.51 per cent.

Although the numerical strength is little changed since 1907, the writer expresses the belief that the membership is much more substantial and that it is a more efficient body once having organized a company at its station to maintain it with as much permanency as possible as he has found that by doing the local pride is sustained and the value of the force thereby greatly increased in time of need. Considerable space is given in his report to the summer's maneuvers, encampment, rifle practice, etc., but the most earnest part of the document is encountered when the writer makes first reference to the need of an armory in Salt Lake City.

In dealing with this question, Gen. Wedgwood draws special attention to the fact that so far various organizations in the national guard with the exception of Ogden are dependent upon rented quarters wholly. Such quarters are altogether inadequate to the purpose of the guard, especially as they have no storage facilities and are entirely lacking in necessary places for the cleaning and repairing of the delicate mechanism of field pieces, rifles and other equipment. These things must be kept in repair and under cover, to say nothing of the storage facilities required for the keeping of other military equipment.

During the past it has been necessary for the national guard quartered in Salt Lake to move five different times. Even the armory at Ogden, the writer says, is far from being satisfactory. There is now available $24,000, which it is recommended should be laid out in the purchase of an armory site. This building could be made to earn a large per cent of its original cost for conventions and other purposes, for which the plan contemplates its design.

The report of Col. Plummer, commanding the First infantry, is attached and made a part of the report of the adjutant general. An important recommendation by Gen. Wedgwood is that officers called upon to do clerical and other work among the companies and in regimental headquarters in addition to the work ordinarily expected of guardsmen be paid for this service. He asks that an appropriation of $4,000 be made by the legislature for this purpose.

The results of the annual inspection by an officer of the regular army are shown in the report to have been very satisfactory and to have shown a marked increase in all lines of efficiency over previous years.

Marked increase in interest in marksmanship is shown to have been manifest during the year, the competition in Ohio, to which Utah sent a team, having stimulated rifle practice to a gratifying extent.

The need of amending the present military code of the state is brought to attention by Gen. Wedgwood, who says in his report that the present laws of the state do not conform to federal requirements.

TROUSERS COME HIGH.

Gus Peterson Given Three Months for Shop Lifting Last Week.

Gus Peterson, an individual with a weakness for annexing sartorial chef d'oeuvre, allowed that he was guilty of stealing five pairs of trousers from the clothing store of Judge Diehl, before Christmas. Judge Diehl, to whom he confided his crime yesterday afternoon, promptly suggested that Gus remain in jail for the space of three months when the weather would be warmer and he would be able to wear the trousers he had stolen. Gus Peterson, a man of about the same age, here is where the resemblance ended. The white Mr. Wilson was given 30 days and the sad-colored John was allowed two hours to get out of town.

MAX FIGMAN

In "The Substitute" at the Salt Lake Theater. Next Thursday. Seats Are Now on Sale.

THE ROUND OF THE THEATERS

THEATER—Mr. James J. Corbett mounted the ladder of fame as well as rounds of pugilism; once established at the top he has been trying for some years, since the days he vanquished the only John L. Sullivan, to maintain his position by means of the stage. As Salt Lake knows who have seen him before, Mr. Corbett is a handsome fellow, of superb physique and with a dashing sort of ability in the delivery of his lines, a good deal of talent, and that he has had a good deal of clever coaching. His new vehicle, "Facing the Music," is a laughable absurdity which makes him the central figure of a series of complications all more or less impossible, but which kept the audience laughing and applauding throughout the evening.

The supporting company ranks on the average and "red" Mr. Corbett in the usual rapid fire fashion. The audience was fair in size but the management expect the business to take a spurt for tonight.

The advance sale opens today for Max Figman's opening Thursday night. CONFUSION—The advance inquiries for seats for the revival of Confusion by the old Home Dramatic club, have been coming in at such a rapid rate, that the company yesterday debated whether it would not be wiser to postpone the whole production to the Salt Lake theater stage. Manager Pyper kindly offered the house, but several members of the cast absolutely declined to play where they were expected to play originally agreed upon, Whitney hall. The dates will therefore stand for next Monday and Tuesday evenings, the advance sale beginning Saturday at the Deseret News Book store.

ORPHEUM—The bill this week at the State street house of mirth is up to the old time standards. This is true in spite of the fact that the acts, or some just about the same, have been seen many times before. The bill opens with the "The Crickets" a season or so ago, was one of the very best parts of their turn. Mack and Marcus, two newspaper cartoonists, the first a San Francisco product and the other from Pittsburgh, fusion by the old Home Dramatic club, are on the stage. Their "cat-tight" number, almost identical with that heard in "The Crickets" a season or so ago, was one of the very best parts of their turn.

Grace Emmett and her associates while away twenty minutes in happy fashion with "Mrs. Murphy's Second Husband." The playlet is a "scream" all the time she is on the stage.

"Happy Millions," by William Morrow and Miss Verda Schellberg is quite a pleasing offering. Tomorrow's laughing song, while not startlingly new, is well suited to aid digestion. The Quaker maid is an attractive and dainty feature of the act. The boys are quite in keeping with eastern views of the west.

The Millman trio is entitled to the big type on the program. Wirewalking at its best is not new and seldom entertains to a degree obtaining while this trio is on the stage. Bird Millman is a marvel—nothing short of the kind of a feat has no special feature except, perhaps, the Vanderbilt cup race. The orchestra selections of the evening were liberally applauded and the hearty reception accorded was well merited. The house was filled in every portion with a most appreciative audience.

COLONIAL—A good sized audience gathered at the Colonial last night to witness Henry W. Savage's version of "The Devil," by James D. Barton & Company. A pleasant feature of the evening was the delightful music furnished by the orchestra, which elicited deserved applause.

The Barton company is a good one, probably above the average, while Mr. Ramsey Wallace, who held the title role, is an actor of great ability, as was evidenced by the wonderful manner in which he portrayed Lucifer going about among men and women dragging them down into the vortex of sin and destruction. The artist of James Rennie, who makes a fine appearance on the stage; Miami, the model of C. G. Gages; Olga Hoffman, the erring wife of Elizabeth Murray, and in fact all the characters were well sustained.

Of the play itself, but little need be said. It is without the suggestion of a moral or morality. From the time the "Evil Spirit" commences his operations in the minds of his subjects till his final success in the end, a dense, rambling, and overwrought every movement on the stage, and almost obscures the polished sentences, the brilliant repartee, with which the play abounds, and the figures of rhetoric. The occasional laugh induced is weak and fruitless, and remains one of a burst of merriment at a funeral. The philosophy is developed in a series of one-act plays, and broad suggestions. It is the subversion of good by evil, of right by wrong, of virtue by vice; over all that is sacred and holy, it is the triumph of the devil.

The auditor, after leaving the hall involuntarily inhales a long, deep breath and feels thankful that it is still the pure air of heaven. The same bill goes for the remainder of the week. GRAND—Three hours of rollicking fun were furnished to an audience that completely filled the Grand theater last night. Aside from the specialties, the bill produced a laugh for every minute, and with these added, there was merriment from the first curtain to the last. The play "Falsely Accused," and in the rendition of it every member of the cast, with one exception, was a humorist. The villain, alone, did not produce any fun; the others were full of it. George Scott, in which the cast of a today-loving "Judge," and between his antics as a "topper" and his "learned" of the law kept the house in an uproar. John C. Davis, as "Hallelujah Billy," colored Trol's comedy of salvation, was a close second as a merry-maker, and several others were not far behind. There was a good exhibition of moving pictures of the regular kind, and the "shadowgraphs," in which the first cast were represented in ludicrous antics, convulsed the audience. "Falsely Accused" runs to be followed by "Thelma" by the same company, and a change of vaudeville features.

LYCEUM—"Too Proud to Beg," a thrilling melodrama by Lincoln J. Cady, was presented last night at the New Lyceum theater before an audience that about half filled the house. The play does not differ from the usual Carter style, but that there is a large percentage of their guests who appreciate the unfolding of the stage of sensational stories, was shown by the applause which greeted the players last evening.

The story is one which deals with a crooked police inspector who is in league with a band of murderous criminals. The man is in love with the wife of Detective Carr, the hero, and plots to murder Carr and possess the woman, but through the prompt actions of Carr's little children, a boy and a girl, the murderous schemes come to naught, and in the end justice is done. The play is well staged and the company in the main is a capable one. The two children, Master Frank Reichardt and Irene Reichardt, are deserving of special mention. Both read their lines well and their singing and dancing act is most cleverly done. Miss Rogers does good work as Bridget O'Rook, as also does Miss Pato as Nellie Carr, wife of the detective. The play runs the week.

LYRIC—The Lyric theater opens its second week as a motion picture house under auspicious conditions. The attendance last week was over 5,000. "The Escape from the Harem" tells a thrilling story of seraglio life, and this with "The Christmas Burglar," a pathetic story with a good ending, and several other feature pictures, form the bill. The Lyric is patronizing the Great Northern Film Manufacturing house of Copenhagen, and the acting of the Dances as shown, compares very well with the French pictures. There is no doubt that the patrons of the house will be well pleased this week. The reserved seats lately added have proved to be very attractive.
