The immense procession was headed by the Presidency of the Stake and the Mayor and City Council; the latter wore badges and acted as pall bearers. Besides the great number on foot there were 85 vehicles filled with people. The occasion was solemn and impressive. At a meeting President L. Snow and a few others delivered funeral discourses, speaking highly of the noble character and distinguished services of deceased. She was the mother of ten children, had seventy-one grandchildren, and seventy-three great grandchildren; she had taken to raise ten motherless children, and nobly performed a mother's part to them. During the past three years she had been sorely afflicted, being almost entirely helpless, for twenty-one days she had been speechless and unable to partake of food, yet, whilst unable to speak she was quite conscious to the last, and several times made signs that she wished the administration for the sick, earnestly desiring to be healed; at the last she passed quietly away, and will now sleep until the resurrection of the just.
