EVENING NEWS.

Thursday, January 13, 1877.

Correspondence.

The Spencer Family.

SALT LAKE CITY,
Jan. 8, 1877.

Editor Deseret News:

Hon. Hyrum Spencer of Berkshire Co., Mass., embraced the gospel in his native town of West Stockbridge in 1839, and nobly faced social, political and religious ostracism in its fullest extent to honor the testimonies of the Spirit of God inspiring his conscience. He was a brother of Daniel and Orson Spencer, well known among this community, a man of great physical power, and as void of fear as men are made.

Many interesting incidents of his life might be named, that made him popular among the good and respected by all classes. The day that Joseph and Hyrum Smith were martyred he was on his farm, six miles east of Nauvoo, and was so influenced that he could not work, and he three times saddled his horse to go to Carthage, but rebuked himself for nervousness.

Before he embraced the gospel in 1838 he was shown, while cutting wood on his farm, the southern rebellion, and the other dismemberment, more terrible in its results, and was in vision over seven hours. From that time he testified to the truth of the Latter-day work, and finally embraced it and moved to Nauvoo. He was among the first in the memorable exodus of the winter of 1846 from that devoted city, sparing no labor for the comfort of his motherless children and the assistance of others. He had previously endured a severe affliction in the loss of the wife of his youth. His whole energies seemed concentrated for the benefit of the entire camp in which he traveled.

The writer well recollects the exposures and labor that he passed through in the snows, rains, and mud of that memorable journey, arriving at Garden Grove in the evening. The next morning he started back to Nauvoo (the journey to Garden Grove had worn nearly everybody out that would be worn), to try and get something for the valuable farms and city property from which his brothers and himself had been driven. He rode fourteen days on horseback, through that then wilderness country, inhabited only by Indians. Not one twenty-four hours of the journey but what it rained. Arriving in Nauvoo, he disposed of one farm for one hundred and ten head of cattle and some wagons to a citizen at Alton. A mob resident of Nauvoo, hearing this, procured writs of attachment to stop the stock, until the second mob could arrive in Nauvoo, and give him a confiscation benefit, although at the time this man Ted owed the Spencers seventeen hundred dollars. Here was an issue which with the large families of the three brothers in the wilderness, plundered and measurably destitute, required tact and nerve.

Through an honorable Gentile, Tod was made to believe that on a certain day the stock would cross the Mississippi at Hannibal, forty miles south of Nauvoo, and he was there with sheriff and posse. That same day the stock crossed sixty miles above Nauvoo, and it was a race (from that to the first "Mormon" camp) of what might be starvation and nakedness for the women and children in the wilderness, or comparative comfort. Six days and a half, and six nights, in the heat and flies of early August, were these cattle driven and guarded by him, and his nephew Claudius, with only six hours' sleep, except on horseback. The strain was too much; he rode his horse till 4 o'clock on the afternoon of his death, when his nephew, seeing him reel, rode to his side, asking him what was the matter? The reply was, "Not much, only I cannot last through; help me down and I will die here." That night, at 11 o'clock, his labors were ended, and he lay, with the peaceful smile of a child, a few feet from the trail, with only one relative to hear his last words, to witness the heroism of a voluntary martyr's death. There was not a groan or a murmur. "Say to my family, Live and die in this work. Take Daniel's [his brother's] counsel." He was buried at Pisgah. He left eight children by the wife of his youth, and two by his then living wife, formerly Miss Emily Thompson, whom he married in Nauvoo (Edwin E. and Francis Spencer). She was left a widow in Winter Quarters in 1846, and was married, according to the old Jewish custom, to her husband's brother, Daniel Spencer.

The peculiar unity of the Spencer brothers and their proved faithfulness to the work have been clouded by a deep regret in the hearts of the family circle that this lady so married should in a suit at law have permitted the question of illegitimacy and disinheritance of some thirteen of her last husband's children to be sprung, children of wives married to him for time and eternity, while her contract, performed by the same authority, was only for time. The writer of this is an old acquaintance and an equal friend of all the family, and is authorized to state that many of the relatives have no countenance or sympathy with the late action in court.

EQUITY.

Death of Hannah, the Wife of Esquimaux Joe.

Hannah Elberling, who was known in her native land as Tookoolito—"Butterfly"—the wife of Joseph Elberling (Esquimaux Joe), died on Sunday, the 31st ult., at her residence in Croton, Conn. She was an Innuite, a native of Frobisher's Straits territory. Esquimaux Joe and Hannah, with one child (Puney), came to America with Captain C. F. Hall on his return from his first expedition toward the North Pole. The adult couple accompanied Captain Hall on his second journey to King William's Land, where Sir John Franklin perished, and were again out with Hall in the Polaris. During the vicissitudes of the expedition Hannah and Joe were, with seventeen others, left on an ice floe. They were picked up off the coast of Labrador after a drift of six months' duration. Joe went again north on board the Tigress, and again, two years since, in the Pandora. During the past summer he was out in Cumberland Sound serving on board a vessel which was employed in collecting minerals. The wet and changeable climate of America caused Hannah and Joe much more physical trouble than did the intense cold of their native place, and eventually produced disease of the lungs in the woman. This was fatal to her. Hannah spoke English fluently. She was greatly respected by her American neighbors for her many amiable and lovable traits of character, and her loss is universally regretted by those among whom she lived and died. When Joe and Hannah visited England they were received by Queen Victoria and entertained in one of the palaces by order of Her Majesty.—New York Herald, Jan. 4.

Of George Dawson it is said that he hated theology and clothes, but loved religion and flowers.
