LEIF ERICKSON'S HISTORY.

Instantaneous History of the Voyages of the Vikings (From the Norse Sagas)—Explanatory Notes.

[Translated for the Deseret News by John Thorsgaard, from an edition published in Iceland by Dr. John Thorsgaard.]

The first cause that led to the discovery of the western hemisphere, was that the Greenlanders (Icelanders) sailed from Iceland and discovered some islands, called Greenland's Shores. These islands were not previously known, and the time is not precisely known, but it is supposed to have been about the year 980.

The name of Greenland, Halli and Guntlaug, took up land and settled on the western coast of Greenland. The time is not precisely known, but it is supposed to have been about the year 980.
