VICTORY FOR IDAHO WOMEN.

Supreme Court Unanimously Decides the Adoption of the Equal Suffrage Amendment.

Boise, Idaho, Dec. 11.—[Special to the Tribune].—By a unanimous opinion the supreme court today held that the equal suffrage amendment was adopted at the recent election. The constitution provides that an amendment shall become part of the constitution if "a majority of the electors" shall vote for it. At the election the amendment received 12,116 votes, while 6,228 were cast against it. There were, however, 29,616 votes cast for electors, and it was held by the court that the majority of the electors had voted for the amendment. The question was taken into the supreme court on a petition for a writ of review, and was argued by some of the leading attorneys in the state.

In deciding the case the court said it was impossible to harmonize the conflicting authorities on the subject, but that the language of the section of the constitution, which contained in connection with the language of other sections of the same article, clearly shows it was intended that a majority voting on an amendment should be sufficient.

The decision carries two other amendments with it. One of these deals with the right of district attorneys, substituting county attorneys. The other segregates the office of probate judge and county school superintendent.

DOMESTIC ECONOMY.

A Law Department in the Brigham Young Academy at Provo.

It was the design of the grant to founder of the Brigham Young Academy that it should be a school of practical as well as theoretical education. An education that should fit the possessor for a practical, independent and benevolent life. Attempts have been made from time to time to establish industries, sloyd work shop practice, carpenter work, which have under various teachers flourished for a time, and a few years ago with a natural aptitude for the work have taken away valuable knowledge in these branches. For the girls there has been a sewing and fancy work department in which there have been good instructions given to a few who would attend long enough to make it of worth to them. This current year there has been a department established called Domestic Economy department where the young women of the Academy irrespective of age may attend and take practical lessons in cooking and many other domestic studies. The teacher of this department, Mrs. Susan Young Gates, is authority for the following statements regarding this branch of the Brigham Young Academy:

"Come down and see the room," she said. "I am sorry the class is not in session. You see we fitted up this room to the basement at our own cost, but at the Academy's expense. We had the walls papered with a lovely salmon pink tint and put up this wainscoting of oil cloth, put in the cupboards, tables, chairs, etc., and borrowed the cook stove. Today we were making jelly. See! This is made of fruit, this is gelatin. The exact recipe is here on the blackboard. Isn't it nice?" and the visitor was obliged to confess that the specimens submitted were as good as her own make.

"This being near the end of the first semester we have already completed the greater part of our program for the first half-year. The class of about fifty members is divided into sections 'A' and 'B.' Each section has a large class was quickly, and able to accommodate those whose other studies came at an hour to interfere. We begin with the boiling of the fire, the lesson was enough on that; then we had also lesson on bread making—all kinds of bread—beginning with yeast of various kinds and ending with the baking. Prof. Stanley lectured to us on the chemistry of yeast. Then we had night lesson on cooking vegetables, two on milk—its care and the theory of butter making, though we are situated that we could not go through the process. Next on our list was fruits, four seasons; eggs and their possibilities, three seasons; soups, six seasons; fish, three seasons; and we have said, yet to consider during this semester.

"This must be quite expensive to the Academy," returned the visitor. "The buying of all this material to experiment on."

"Oh, no," said Mrs. Gates, "I have bought all this expensive myself. You see I have always been very much interested in seeing just such a class of instruction given to our young women, and now I am willing to make some sacrifice to see it a success. The aim is to give our girls a class of instruction that will make them better citizens, better wives and better mothers. Besides, what I have already said, you see, had lectures from various members of the family on many subjects related to the domestic economy. Some of these were order, system and cleanliness in the home, economy of time, economy of means, home furnishings, cook and beauty in the home, hospitality, friendship, the children, the mother and the father, each considered as separate topics. And we have given some consideration to the vexed question of domestic help, for we do not believe in 'servants' and have talked a good deal about 'housekeeping' bargains and auctions. We have also had a number of lectures on physiology and chemistry."

"But are not these studies part of your regular curriculum?" asked the visitor.

"Oh, yes, and again no. You see we only take up these branches that apply directly to life and their peculiar line of work. We had in physiology, for instance, digestion, assimilation, circulation, ventilation, and the Word of Wisdom, physical culture, sleep, clothing, dress for girls, and cleaning of linens, the correct use of the sewing machine, and the chemistry of yeast and bread, and the chemistry of water, air, vegetables, soups and fats."

During the remaining weeks of this semester Professor Gates will deliver three lectures on domestic accounts of bookkeeping in the household.

"That is all admirable and in the right direction, if you are able to instill the earnest efforts of the girls," remarked the visitor. "Is that the complete program for the first semester?"

"Oh, no. We make our special heavier religious exercises here on the good work, and our lectures on ethics and religion have been, of human rights, honesty of purpose and action, charity, civility, truthfulness, selflessness, humility, tidiness, Sabbath day, faith, fasting and prayer, perseverance, courage, kindness and contentment, all applied strongly to women in their household—the home."

"Now I said all grades of students could enter this class, and so they can, but you will readily see that these under a certain grade of scholarship will not be able to profit, greatly by these lectures on advanced subjects. We wish to be the means of giving girls just what the greater number can profitably use all their lives."

The visitor left the pretty room with a very favorable impression of this new and interesting department of our most popular educational institution the Brigham Young Academy.
