

Portland Smothered in Roses.

Air Heavy With the Perfume of Flowers at the Great Fiesta, Where it is Estimated Three Million Buds Have Been Plucked to Adorn the Floats—The Parade Literally a River of Roses Sixty Feet Wide and Two Miles Long—School Children Dressed as for a Grecian Holiday

HENRY K. SILVERSMITH

Special Correspondence.
PORTLAND, Oregon, June 20.—With 30,000 visitors in the city, and as many more expected within the next 24 hours, as fast as scheduled floats can arrive loaded to the guards every hour, the first annual Portland rose show and fiesta is under way. This, Thursday is "Children's and Pioneer Day." Two thousand school children from 26 different schools each under a principal eager to win one of the five silver loving cups for the best trained band, every boy and girl wreathed in roses, trailing vines and other native blossoms have turned the vast downtown district into a rose-garden playground. Tomorrow comes the great event of the fiesta, "The Parade of Roses." Two abreast, docketed with roses, ferns, vines, native flowers and fruits, marshalled with bands of music the column will extend over two miles and will take an hour or more to pass the reviewing stand.

VALUABLE PRIZES.

Cash prizes amounting to $1,500 are offered in amounts from $200 down to $50 for the finest effects in various classes. Besides these are hung up 35 trophies costing $1,270, consisting of solid silver loving cups, mugs and bowls, pieces of cut glass, vases, and other bric-a-brac dear to the feminine heart.

First and second prizes ranging from $300 to $50 will be given for the best decorated city block on both sides; for the best store front; the finest show window; and the most artistically decked private residence.

ROSE BOWERS GALORE.

The Forestry building at the Lewis & Clark exposition grounds is one bower of roses. Here still other prizes are offered for the finest single roses of various kinds. Massed and banded on every hand is a wealth of the newly chosen "Portland Rose," technically called the "Caroline Testout." This magnificent rose finds its ideal environment in Portland today.

the first time in her history Portland and the country for 50 miles around are stripped of the favorite flower. Not in history, perhaps, have so many of this queen of flowers been gathered together as in Portland today.

DECORATING THE FLOATS.

Hid in buildings and out of way places are regal floats receiving their last touches. The roses will be put on tonight and tomorrow morning. Portland today could use 5,000,000 roses. It is of course impossible to say how many flowers are in the city but an estimate by those who have seen the preparations place the number not less than 3,000,000. The parade tomorrow will be literally a river of roses 60 feet wide and two miles long dawning a rippling current of color and fragrance through the city streets between high banks of waving flags and streamers of bunting and silk trailing vines and still more roses falling like waterfalls of tinted perfume from roofs and windows to the crowded laughing sidewalks.

And through it all wind long lines of little school girls dressed in white and wreathed in roses as for a Grecian holiday. Automobiles, banked with flowers, pick their way carefully through the crowds, the people in them tossing flowers to those on the sidewalks or in other vehicles who shower them back again.

Today Portland is a sea of laughter and flowers; a scene rarely equaled and never exceeded in any city of the world. The carnival ends with spectacular events Saturday night.

THE LITTLE TADS AT HOME.
"Of course we know we love 'em when we're with 'em every day, and we'd know it in a minute if one chance to get away. But we take a lot for granted, in the common course of life. And the world keeps tugging at us with its everlasting strife; but when a little journey of a hundred miles or so gets between us and the garden where the olive branches grow. There's a sense of something lacking when the quiet hours come, and a rush of tender longing for the little tads at home."

"We think they're awful noisy, and we wish they'd let us be. When there's half a dozen scrapping for a place upon your knee. We want to read the paper, and we'd like a chance to think. It's a wonder such a racket doesn't drive a man to drink. But the little hotel chamber is as quiet as a tomb. Not a note of childish laughter comes to drive away the gloom, and we'd give a thousand dollars, as we glow in our room, for a jolly evening's tussle with the little tads at home."

"We do a little reading, then we try a quiet thought. But the page gets dim and blurry as with tears we are caught. And we sit beside the window in the twilight still and gray. While our thoughts go flying to the cottage far away. The same old moon shines on us that has kissed them by her beams, as we seek our lonely pillow to be with them in our dreams. And the last coherent murmur the mind begins to roam. Is a whispered, 'God bless mamma and the little tads at home.'"

How to Prevent Wrinkles

It is the thin, dry, poorly nourished skin that wrinkles. Skin that does not contain enough oil to keep it soft and elastic. Wrinkles are nothing but creases in the outer skin. Feeds the cutaneous tissues do not get nourishment enough to keep them plump and firm, and the outer skin sags and wrinkles. Plump people rarely wrinkle because they feed the skin with Kosmeo, and the outer skin is stretched smooth over the plump tissues without a wrinkle or crease.

Four Children Who Will Be Worth $250,000,000

LONDON has heard that Mrs. Marshall Field intends taking her two $125,000,000 sons from Rusby this fall and bring them back to America to enter a Massachusetts school. The report has started a lively discussion in the English capital as to whether the Field boys are really richer than the children of Barney Barnato, the late diamond king, who jumped from a steamer while en route from South Africa to London.

Young Marshall Field, it is estimated, will be worth fully $125,000,000 by the time he is of age. Ladas Rosebery Barnato and Leah Primrose Barnato are both younger than the Field boys, and the fortune left to them at the time of their father's death is estimated at about the same figures as that left to the Field boys.

The Barnato children's fortune, however, is largely invested in diamond lands, and the London newspapers which are trying to prove that England has the more wealthy children declare that with the constantly rising price of diamonds the fortune of the two Barnato children will be larger than that of the Fields by the time they come of age.

Little Miss Barnato is named after the first mine owned by her father. All four of these multimillionaire infants are living a most simple life. The Field boys have automobiles as their one luxury, but their diet and general training are almost Spartan.

The Barnato children are never seen in public. They have ponies and are fond of driving, but are required to pass more hours a day at their lessons than are the average boys and girls of America and England.—N. Y. American.
