Mrs. Decker, writing in the federation Bulletin for March, in regard to the need of national organ, as well as State organs, says some very interesting and valuable things. She says in regard to the advisability of a wide dissemination of General Federation news: "In order to build the General Federation solidly and vitally, there must be interest in the work of the standing committees, and duplication of those committees in the State federation. The suggestion has been made, in fact, that the State federation be asked to create their standing committees after the exact pattern of the General Federation standing committees. Then there would be harmonious work all along the line.

"If the General Federation is to accomplish its great mission, there must be knowledge of the personnel and plans of its officers; there must be study of the work of its standing committees; there must be constant touch with its slightest motion—above all, there must be the spirit of cordiality, loyalty and abiding faith and cooperation, which animates an army. We believe this would be the case now, only for the fact that the clubwomen of the country lack knowledge of our work. The General Federation is something unreal to many of them, far off and intangible. In visiting federations that attitude is very marked. Many members have never even heard of the insignia of the General Federation. Many have no idea of the history of the organization, its objects, its aims."

The suggestion quoted, that the State federations should be asked to create their standing committees after the exact pattern of the standing committees in the General Federation, has the endorsement of this department. It would, perhaps, be difficult to bring about such an arrangement. The Federations in many Southern States would probably refuse to establish child labor committees, for example. All who attended the St. Louis Biennial will remember the engaging president of the North Carolina federation. As for our women," she declared, "we do as we please, and we please to please the men. That is why we do some things so well and others not at all. . . . That is why village improvement, state charities, and education are successful departments, and their power for good are constantly on the increase. And that is why civil service reform has not been touched. It borders on politics, and our men have spoken in no uncertain terms concerning it." It is easy to laugh at such pretty prattle, but at the same time we have to admit that clubwomen must put their domestic peace before everything. Part of the secret of the wonderful success of the club movement lies in the fact that nowhere has it been pitted against the ideals of a community. Still, as a general proposition, the state federations should follow as nearly as possible the working plans of the national organization.

Fresh-Air Treatment.

The writer is very proud of her acquaintance with a little girl who in the three years of her life has never known even an hour's illness. She has never had a stomach ache nor the slightest sign of a cold. Not a feeding-time (as a little baby), not a meal, has she ever missed. Her teeth came quietly, without disturbance of any kind, and a restless night is to her unknown. Her mother ascribes this most unusually perfect health entirely to out-of-door life the child has always led. She was born in the latter part of October. Many babies who enter into the world so near cold weather are most carefully housed until spring. Not so with small Bertha. She was sent out almost at once, and at two weeks old was spending nearly all day in the open air. All through that first winter she had all her naps out in the carriage and only a driving storm sufficed to keep her indoors. Last winter was, as we all remember, extraordinarily cold, but little Bertha was out just the same, and in spite of the croakings of anxious friends who predicted pneumonia, was the only child in the family circle who went through the winter triumphantly without a cold. It may well be that all children could not be thus reared to out-of-door life, but the fact remains that more children are injured by coddling than are ever hurt by exposure to wind and weather.—Harper's Bazar.

A BLOW IN THE DARK.

A firm of cheap clothing makers was dissolved not long ago, and in no amicable way. A lawsuit over the settlement was the result, and the cause of Meyer against Jacobs came to trial. According to the way the story is told in the Lawyers' Club former Judge Dittenhoefer was the counsel for the plaintiff.

"I think I will send the judge a nice box of cigars," said Mr. Meyer to his counsel during a recess in the trial. "Perhaps he will feel more kindly toward me then."

"No, no; don't do that," replied Mr. Dittenhoefer. "It wouldn't be right at all. You would offend him very deeply, for he would think you were trying to bribe him. Your case isn't any too good now, and you would surely lose it if you did that."

The trial ended with a verdict in Meyer's favor.

"Well, I won," said the victorious litigant to his lawyer, with a broad smile, "and say, I did send the judge those cigars."

"You did?"

"Yes, sir; but I put Jacobs' card in the box."
