The Centennial Dory.

The boat Centennial arrived at Liverpool August 21st, after a voyage across the Atlantic. She was sailed by a man named Alfred Johnsen, a Dane, and left Gloucester, Mass., on June 18. Johnsen is in good health, but suffers for want of sleep, and his legs are stiff and weak, owing to the confinement of the voyage. He is a smart, intelligent man of about 35. On arriving at New Brighton he was cheered by passengers on a ferry-boat. He did not land at the landing stage, where a number of people had assembled to meet him, but sailed up the river, and was ultimately met by the proprietor of the Rock Ferry Hotel, with whom he arranged to exhibit his boat on the grounds. The Centennial was accordingly taken up, and will be shown to the public to-day. The Centennial is a boat of the kind known in America as a dory. She is twenty feet long, partially flat-bottomed, and has a centre-board. She is decked over, is built in three water-tight compartments, and was supplied with provisions for thirty days. She was built expressly for the trip, and is of pine, extra timbered with oak. She carried one mast, and can set a mainsail, two jibs and a square-sail. Johnson left Gloucester on the 18th of June, the people cheering him heartily as he sailed away. The weather was fine at first, but it afterward changed to fogs and head-winds, which lasted until the 22d, when he put into Shake Harbor, his compass being affected by his iron ballast. He started again on the 25th, and had a fine passage and fair winds until the 7th of July, when in latitude 41.50 north, longitude 54 west, a heavy gale from the southwest sprang up, during which the boat shipped a heavy sea, which started the combing of the hatchway, and the water got in and spoiled some of the provisions. At this time he spoke a bark bound from Mexico to Liverpool, and the Captain invited Johnsen to go on board, saying he would drop him off Cape Clear, and not mention anything about it; but Johnsen declined. The gale passed away and he had fine weather until the 16th of July, when a strong breeze came from the southwest, and he made a good run until the 2nd of August, on which day, being then about 300 miles from Cape Clear, he spoke the brig Maggie Gander, from New York to Swansea. After running for a couple of hours with the brig, which shortened sail to keep company, Johnsen hove his boat too in order to ride out the gale, which had greatly increased. He unshipped the mast for this purpose. About half an hour after being hove to, the boat got broadside on to a heavy sea and capsized, but Johnsen got on the bottom and remained there about twenty minutes, when another sea struck her and he succeeded in righting her. This was about three o'clock in the afternoon. Just after getting into the boat again he saw a shark alongside, and its fins struck against the bottom of the boat. He fastened a knife to an oar and cut at the shark, which then went away. The boat was half full of water, but he pumped it out and weathered the gale, which lasted till next day. Everything was wetted, and he lost his kerosene stove and his square sail by the upset. The weather continued rainy and foggy for four days, during which time he could not dry anything.

On Monday, August 7, about 100 miles off Cape Clear, he spoke the brig Alfredon, from Liverpool to Baltimore, and got some bread and water, his own bread having been damaged by the salt water. Next day he got soundings to the south of Cape Clear, but it was foggy, and he could not see land. On the 9th he spoke the ship Prince Lombardo, which gave him the bearings of Wexford Head as fifty-three miles east by north. On the 10th he sighted Milford, but the wind became contrary and he put into Abercastle. He sailed again on the 12th, and reached Holyhead last Friday, and Liverpool yesterday morning. Johnsen estimates that his average run during the voyage was seventy miles a day. He was provided with medicines before starting. When asked yesterday if he would care to repeat the voyage, Johnsen replied that he thought "he had had about enough of it." — London Daily News.

Women as Swimmers.

Miss Kate Bennett, a teacher of swimming, yesterday gave an exhibition of the results of her training at Dexter's baths. At 3 o'clock the platform around the water in the women's department was crowded with spectators, and the dressing rooms were occupied by the competitors, exchanging the graceful garb of everyday womanly wear for the anything but graceful bathing dresses. At half-past 4 the swimmers appeared with rushes and jumps that carried them into the water that concealed them from the gaze of the laughing spectators. Most of the swimmers were women, and some had gray hair. There were very few girls and children. They dived, swam—overhand and on the back—and floated. The bath was too small to admit of much fast swimming or racing, but all did remarkably well. The prizes were: To Mrs. Smith, a gold chain; to Mrs. Ashley, a set of jewelry, and to Miss Lederer, a gold locket.

There was a race between May Dexter, a pretty little four-year-old blonde baby, who looked like a fairy in her blue bathing suit, and Josie Hurd, a few months younger, a brown eyed, round-limbed beauty with wealth of brown hair, who looked like a Cupid in her garnet suit. Just before they appeared Miss Bennett took a "header" into the water from her dressing rooms, and then swimming gracefully to the starting point, gave the word "One, two, three" to the little ones, who stood on the steps at the water's edge. At the word "three" they plunged pluckily into the water, which was far beyond their depths, and struck out finely. It was "nip and tuck" between them. May showed the most skill, but Josie was the pluckiest. Once or twice Josie's curly head went quite under the water, but she managed to reach the arms of her teacher, in the middle of the bath, quite as soon as her rival. Then Miss Bennett took them on her shoulders and swam around the bath with them, laid them on their backs and floated with them, and finally started them from the middle of the bath to reach the platform as best they might. They deserved the rings which rewarded their efforts.

After the swimming matches were over there was a pleasant surprise for the teacher: one of her pupils gave to her, in the name of all the pupils, a purse full of money.—New York Sun, Aug. 20.

Five Hundred Beautiful Girls Looking For Husbands.

Saratoga Springs, N.Y., Aug. 30.

The marriage market, for which the "Spa" once was so noted, is now a by-gone and thing of the past. Anxious mammas and papas look in their faces the very picture of despair. Why I actually overheard a conversation on the Grand Union piazza not many evenings ago between a middle-aged couple, who have three daughters, and in which I heard the male parent complain that the fashionable outfits for his family and their expenses this season at Saratoga would spoil $7,500, and that it was too expensive for him if his daughters never got married; not another dress or a dollar would his girls or his wife get this year, and that he was going home to-morrow, where he could take off his coat and be comfortable down stairs. To which the loving wife replied that a wealthy young man was very attentive to Laura, their youngest girl, and she wanted to stay a few weeks longer, and she reasoned to him how much less expenses would be if one of their girls were only married, and how much better chances it would give the other two, etc. But no, he said he was going to square up, and leave, as, if he would stay here long enough, they would bankrupt him, and on her telling him she felt faint, into the house they went. But I saw them still here and out riding this morning, and so infer she carried her point and they will remain longer. There are five hundred beautiful girls here in quest of husbands, and oh! what a field for a young man who is also matrimonially inclined. And these pretty young maidens are so pretty and gushing that really to a lover of beauty and sentimental nonsense they have an irresistible look. Young men, bachelors, this is the field for you in summer. Gamblers' wives are out here by the choice society, while those of the Wall street brokers and speculators are not. Where next will the world draw the line, I wonder?—Spray, in Cleveland Herald.
