While Cornelia Baxter Tevis McKee was being held up to scorn as a selfish, frivolous social butterfly before the divorce court of Paris, Gen. Hughes, the sweetheart of her girlhood was embarking upon the matrimonial sea in Denver, where, nearly eight years ago, she broke short her engagement with him to marry Lloyd Tevis, the California millionaire.

Hughes, the son of Charles J. Hughes, Jr., one of the foremost corporation lawyers of the west, after his disappointment, devoted himself to palltics and law. His friends declared that the shock of his rejection by Cornelia Baxter and her subsequent marriage to a millionaire nearly drove young Hughes to desperation. Since then Hughes has gone to the state senate and has been unusually successful at the bar, but the distinction of having been Mrs. Tevis McKee's first love has clung to him persistently.

His marriage to Mrs. Mabel Nagle of Cheyenne, Wyo., is the talk of Colo. ado and Wyoming.

Mrs. Nagle was the daughter of a boarding house keeper in Cheyenne. Her first husband, a wealthy wholesale grocer of the Wyoming capital, she divorced, charging drunkenness and cruelty, to offset which Nagle brought in the name of the family coachman. With her liberal alimony, Mrs. Nagle continued to figure in society after her divorce. In Washington she was a close friend of Senator Warren of Wyoming: Senator Patterson of Colorado, and Thomas F. Walsh, the mining millionaire. Through her Washington friends she secured an invitation to accompany the Taft party to the Philippines last year.
