Lord's House in this dispensation strictly proper place, a temple built, completed, and dedicated to him. But that disadvantage has passed or will shortly pass away. The Temple at St. George is completed so far as to be dedicated for certain uses for which it was designed, and the administrations therein, for the living and the dead, have commenced, to the joy of the Saints.

The Saints in the southern portion of the Territory and parts adjacent thereto will be specially gratified in having located amongst them a place where those important ordinances can be attended to instead of them being under the necessity, as formerly, of coming all the way to this city, between three and four hundred miles, to attend to those ordinances, and the dwellers in the south may be congratulated accordingly.

their "power behind the throne," the London dispatches of the New York Herald says, Jan. 6-

"The secret of the firm front sustained by Turkey is that the mighty Jewish financiers have resolved to help the Porte through resentment at the persecutions of the Jews in Roumania. This is a strange turn to-affairs, and shows the growth of a new power in Europe whose early steps are well worth studying.

"At any rate, it has given the new Grand Visier, Midhat, courage to say things to the infidel which devout Turks have been saying to each other under their teeth for some months past. Repeating the determination of Turkey to concede nothing affecting the independence and integrity of its power, he flatly told Salisbury a day or two ago—'We were only 600 when we invaded Europe; we shall be only six when we depart.'

"Dreading a general Moslem crusade, she [Russia] is apparently trying to slip out of the entangle-ment to avoid national bankruptcy and a general break up."

Roumania requires a more solemn declaration that her status will not be affected by the Turkish constitution than a simple communication to the Rouse simple communication to the Rou-manian agent at Constantinople. Unfortunately, this difficulty has arisen just as a party, who was op-posed to a convention being made with Russia for facilitating the pas-sage of the Russian troops through Roumania, had, after a hard strug-gle, gained the upper hand. Constantinople, 12.—The European plenipotentiaries at a meeting held at the Russian Embassy, today, decided to make the last communication to the Ottoman delegates on Monday, and demand a categorical reply. The conference will meet again on Thursday to receive the reply. If the Turks persist in their refusal, all the members of the Conference will quit Constantinople on Friday.

It is said the Sultan has resolved, that if no agreement is reached by Feb. 28th, to recommence hostilities against Servia and Montenegro on March 1st.

It is stated the Porte, at last Thursday's sitting of the Conference, adduced reasons for its rejection of the eight essential points of the European proposals, and absolutely refused to discuss the most important of the proposals, viz: the appointment of governors of provinces subject to the approval of the Powers and the creation of an international commission.

At 12 m. the doors of the Temple were opened to the people, who had gathered to participate in the Dedication ceremonies and at 12.45 about 1,300 people had been admitted, some having come from as far north as Parowan. The prayers were offered by Elders W. Woodruff, E. Snow, and B. Young, Jun., after which President B. Young arcse and addressed the people with great earnestness and power, and, though he was in feeble health, I never heard him speak with greater power than on this occasion. Sleighing Carnival-The Rival Pres-Idents Elect.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 5, 1877. Editor Deseret News: The first day of 1877 was remarkable for such a snow as has been rarely seen in this latitude, and, during the week, sleighs have almost universally taken the place of wheeled vehicles. Yesterday there was an impromptu sleighing carnival on Penusylvania Avenue. The district commissioners but district commissioners had given their consent to the sport, and a division of the police had been de-tailed to keep orders. Those taking part in the procession were expected to be in masquerade costume, but their part of the programme was not strictly adhered to. Indeed it was not to be supposed that our Washington belies would forego such an opportunity to display their artistic faces and bleached their artistic faces and bleached hair. Many of them were out, panoplied in all their dazzling beauty. About three o'clock the masqueraders began to make their appearance, and as sleigh after sleigh dashed past, each with its freight of grotesque and rainbow hued humanity, the avenue presented an appearance of nue presented an appearance of great galety, and fun and merriment prevailed everywhere. The sides of the streets were thronged with pedestrians, who seemed to derive almost as much pleasure, in the role of spectators, as the masquers themselves. From the Treasury to the Capitol the avenue was crowded with sleighs of every

Treasury to the Capitol the avenue was crowded with sleighs of every description, from the graceful swanlike cutter to the barrel or dry goods box mounted on clumsy run ners. Conspicuous among the devices resorted to by the masqueraders to create laughter was a tableuux vivant caricaturing the Louisians returning board. This consisted of a primitive sled, in which were seated four men, their faces blackened with cork, busily engaged with the returns. But the most laughable rig was a tandem team, consisting of a superannuated mule and a venerable borse, drawing a log of wood mounted on four slanting hickory stleks fixed in a pair of wooden runners. Astride the mule was a mgamuffin, who were a plug hat, a pair of spectacles and hoop skirt, nething else in his grotesque make-up was desirable. Under the end eyed mule was hung a large dinner-bell. The philosophic beast trudged slong "with no pride of ancestry or hope of posterity," followed by an unhappy specimen of his nobler relation, upon whose back was sented another oucimen of his nobler relation, upon whose back was seated another curious nondescript. Two ridiculous specimens of humanity bestrode the log, with their feet scraping the snow. The one in the rear represented a fat woman hugging her companion in front, in order to keep an equilibrium, or perhaps from affection. Shouts of laughter greeted this most absurd of turnouts as it moved slowly along the avenue.

The many handsome equipages were objects of surprise to those who saw them, for it was not known that Washington could afford so All the old Favorites with the Troupe:
