CLUB CHAT.

The Daughters of the Revolution will meet on Monday in the Exponent office at 3 o'clock.

The Ladies' Literary club meeting yesterday afternoon was in charge of the home and education section. Three topics along the lines of work done and undertaken by the club were presented.

Mrs. William C. Jennings spoke on "Looking Backward." Dr. J. B. Beatty on "Looking Forward," and Mrs. A. J. Gorman, the president of the club, on "Looking Upward." This music was furnished by Miss Edna Day month. There appears to have been a genuine reaction against making federation meetings too social in their character. The Nebraska clubwomen have been advised in the club department of the Nebraska State Journal as follows: "It is perhaps none too soon to notify the women over the state that no formal receptions are to be given in their honor during the convention, and that it will be quite unnecessary to prepare new evening frocks for the occasion. This decision may cause disappointment to some, but the reception is usually regarded as a nuisance by delegates on account of the extra clothing required, and the break in the convention routine. It is the intention to endeavor to introduce the element of sociability in other ways."

The colored women's clubs of Minnesota have just held a state federation meeting in Minneapolis, delegates from 19 clubs presenting themselves. Mayor Jones of Minneapolis welcomed the delegates, and several speakers of prominence contributed to an interesting program. Among the speakers were Mrs. Lucy Thurman, president of the Michigan State Federation of Colored Women's clubs, and Mrs. Carrie Clifford of this city. Mrs. Thurman made a plea for the establishment of day nurseries and free kindergartens for the young children of colored working women, and Mrs. Clifford spoke on social conditions in the south, and the intelligent colored women of the country are counted upon to ameliorate. There is certainly an amount of work ahead of these clubs. No class of young people stand more in need of a settlement work, literary and other clubs, and colored boys and girls of this country. The women's clubs have a great responsibility, which they will undoubtedly fulfill.

The women of Madison, Wis., made up their minds this summer that the town needed a new high school. A special election having been called to decide the question, on an issue of bonds for the purpose of building, the women, especially the clubwomen of the city, resolved to exercise their limited right of suffrage and secure the school. Few women had ever been known to vote at school elections, and their announcement that they meant to work for the new building troubled the opposition very little. Before election day it became apparent that the women were in control. On the day of the election, July 25, the women were out in full force. Many sent their private carriages to be used to convey voters to and from the polls. Housekeepers brought their own lunch with them. The result of the election was a majority of 24 votes in favor of the bond issue. The male vote showed a majority of 137 against the bonds, while the women's vote polled a majority of 421 in favor of the proposition. Practically all of the opposition came from two wards in the city, but even in those wards only 68 women were induced to vote against the question. The opposition threatened to contest the election on the ground that women have no right under the law to vote on a school bond issue, although they have the right to vote on all school questions. The legal right of the women to vote at the election will be sustained, according to the best opinion, but there is some fear that the opposition will succeed in delaying somewhat the construction of the school.

though they have the right to vote on all school questions. The legal right of the women to vote at the election will be sustained, according to the best opinion, but there is some fear that the opposition will succeed in delaying somewhat the construction of the school.

Women are receiving more and more recognition in the west. The first woman member of the Wisconsin state board of control has just been appointed. Dr. Alma J. Frisby of Milwaukee was the appointee. Dr. Frisby, according to a Milwaukee paper, "has long taken an active interest in charitable and reform work. For some time she has been a special agent of the governor and has made an investigation of the state institutions. In this work making her reports directly to the executive. In this work she has shown ability and has been instrumental in doing a great amount of good to the institutions which came under her supervision. Dr. Frisby is a member-at-large of the board of regents of the University of Wisconsin."

In Woman's World.

Serge has undergone a radical change, like velvet and taffeta and half a hundred richer stuffs. It can be had now in a quality combining both the softness that made it such a satisfactory year-round material, and with the soft finish that permits it to be treated as all new styles require.

A pretty feature of many of the dressy gowns of white mousseline or crepe de chine is the introduction of long washes of dark gauze printed with great flowers in a maze of bright colors.

Ruches—big ones—are being worn more frequently in pale colors than even in black or white. Of the colors, pale blue is leading favorite. Palletes, in spite of all rumors to the contrary, are very much used for evening dresses, to live up to dull laces or tulle.

Three-quarter length coats, with skirts to walking length, make up most of the morning suits.

Novel veils of shaded mousseline have half the colors of the rainbow introduced on a single veil. The material is so sheer and the colors printed so delicate that the introduction of so many colors is subtle rather than confusing. These veils are worn carefully draped back so that the ends fall together at the back in a drapery of soft color.

Pale gray veils have become immensely popular.

An incredible amount of work is being expended upon all sorts of dresses; there's no more extravagant form of "simplicity."

Automobile wraps grow more elegant and extravagant every day, with a hundred during innovations made in them.

Broadcloths, as usual, will make a great number of the evening coats; but mohair, silk, or, of course, with the first time for years, come into service for that use. In broadcloths, while most of all will be used, but gray—that exquisite shade known as "silver"—will be popular, and a soft, pale blue.

Cunning water bottles find their way into the most complete of the baby baskets. The smaller bags are chosen, and over them, in chain-stitch, is crocheted an open cover of pink or blue silk.

Gray covert cloth is gaining ground steadily. It's a copy of English styles, that clean, straight, simple, and smart England as the tan covers have been here.

Chiffon and chiffon cloth will be made up over white for blouses. Some of them will be made in a lighter shade of the color of the broadcloth suit with which they are worn.

As to colors, black is back and plum color promises to be strong. Blue is staple and is popular this year as well, carrying out the predictions made last spring and summer. Next to blue is green, especially in the shades that depend upon olive tones. And red will have a hearing.

More separate coats will be about than have been seen for many a season. They won't take the place of suits, however, but establish themselves as an extra.

The popularity of green is the natural sequel to the faded brown, which has practically worn itself out, although, in Paris, a warm chestnut brown is taking things mildly by storm.

For a toilet to be absolutely fashionable at this moment it must have a touch of black about it somewhere.
