Corn in Russia.

Minister Foster writes to the Department of State un-der date of July 18, that the Russian wheat crop is likely to be one of the largest ever raised in the empire, and the export promises to be greater than usual. It is stated in the districts tributery to the port in the districts tributary to the port of Odessa, that the yield is likely to be so large that the farmers think they could dispense with harvests for four years to come. Advices from Taganrog and Caucussus show age incident to bad weather and in-sects. Moscow, which is the great-commercial centre of Russia, it is reported all branches of business are beginning to revive and flourish after a long season of depression solely on account of prospects of abundant harvest, It will not be without practical political influence also, for much discontent in the interior has resulted from hard times

Lendon, 9. — There seems little doubt that the English wheat crop is about an average one in point of quantity, and rather above the average one in respect to quality. It is also reasonably certain that no European country, other than England will need to impost wheat after the harvest of 1881 has been gathered in, and it is evident that Russia has an exceptionally abundant crop, whose surplus will enable her to bear a more prominent part than whose surplus will enable her to bear a more prominent part than usual in competition with the English market.
