Situations in the Bank of England are much coveted, but the average salary of the 1,100 employes of that great institution is only $1,365, including what is paid in pensions, and the governor of the bank receives only 5,000. There is considerable difference between these figures and those paid bank officials and employes throughout America generally; and yet hough so much more poorly paid in England than in this country, cases of defalcation and peculation are comparatively seldom heard of there among bank employes.
