Four Days in a Snow Drift.

The St. Paul Press relates the horrible sufferings of a party in a recent Northwest snow storm. They had started out on a journey of twenty-five miles to Wilmer, and quite early in the afternoon it began to snow, but they passed on. Soon the snow grew intense, and great drifts prevented their advance. Setting up the box of one of the sleighs as a protection against the wind, without food, and very few blankets, they huddled together until the snow would pass over. Thus passed Tuesday night. The next morning, one of them started for a house about a mile distant after trying to persuade the others to accompany him. They considered it safer where they were. He started off, and reached Meagher's with both hands frozen. The storm continued so severe that no attempt could be made to rescue the others at that time. They, in the meantime, were suffering all the pangs of cold and hunger, and it is quite probable that several of them became delirious, for when found they were lying out of and near the shelter.

About 10 o'clock on Friday morning, a man passing along the road with an ox team, heard shouts as of some one in distress, and upon making search discovered the little barricade covered with packed snow, and was horrified, upon disturbing several apparent knolls in the vicinity, to find that they contained the dead bodies of men. He found the bodies of Thos. Holden, Steuben O'Neil, and John O'Neil, the first two quite dead, and the latter with life almost extinct. Upon searching under the cover, he discovered two feet protruding from the snow, and breaking away the crust he found Charles O'Neil alive, but in a terrible condition. The bodies were at once lugged to his sled and conveyed to Meagher's and thence to Wilmer, John O'Neil dying before reaching that place. The details of the suffering of Charles O'Neil are horrifying and almost incredible. It seems that he had lain down, immediately upon entering the cover, and had, while in this position, been fastened down by the terrible weight of the snow which drifted upon him, or rather the upper portion of his body. It was so heavy, he said, as to cause almost unbearable torture. After he found that he was unable to rise, and that the snow was covering his head, he feared suffocation, and to keep that member free constantly raised and lowered it, and in this manner, while he could not prevent the drift from forming over it, he formed an air chamber, which prevented suffocation. In his endeavor to free his head, the poor fellow actually tore the hair almost entirely from the scalp. Here he lay, with his feet exposed to the air frozen stiff, and the cruel frost creeping up his limbs, and unable to move scarcely a muscle of his body, from Tuesday night until nearly Friday noon. Can a more horrible situation be imagined? The poor fellow's right arm is frozen to the elbow, the right leg to the knee, and the left leg above the ankle. These members are thus far completely dead, and he has been lying at Wilmer until yesterday, when the first train succeeded in getting through.

Five of the horses were frozen to death, and the others were found five miles away, all right.

Jean Ingelow.

The following letter from Jean Ingelow to Mrs. Lucy Stone, of Boston, will be read with interest:

"Dear Madam: I have been long in the habit of receiving from America your interesting paper, the Woman's Journal, and, as I do not know who is the kind and courteous donor, I hope I may convey my thanks through you, as one of the editors.

"I am glad of the information I derive from the Journal, but I have not found time hitherto to give the whole subject of rights such an amount of study as to make it wise to utter my crude thoughts respecting them; other things appear to be given to me to do, and I take them up to the exclusion of what lies beyond.

"You have, I venture to think, more than one problem to work out in America, on which, in a great degree, depends the welfare of women. In one of these I take a keen interest, and I hope to see you settle it for yourselves and for us. I want you to discover how domestic work is to be combined with high culture.

"So long as household work is thought degrading (and nowhere is this so much the case as in America), there can never be anything like universal education; there must always be some who can work all their lives because others will not at all. It is to be one of the great things that you Americans, I believe, are raised up for, to teach this world how this is to be done; but the teachers can never be those who are poor; they must be those who are not obliged to work at all.

"How to make clear starching and ironing graceful and pretty occupations (and such they were thought by our great-great-grandmothers,) how to keep a house clean, and to assist, even in a kitchen, without the least sense of being lowered, or the slightest personal deterioration, might surely be managed if women gave their minds to it—if more delicate machinery was invented for helping them, and if it could even be made the fashion for all women, young or old, to pride themselves on their domestic skill.

"I hope, if you can, you will convey my thanks to the lady who sends me your paper, and will believe that I take a deep interest in everything which so sincerely aims at your good.

"I am, dear madam, very truly yours,

"JEAN INGELOW."

BREVITIES.

A French writer says: "The seasons in London are equally divided—there are four months of Winter, four of fog, and four of rain."

"This insurance policy is a queer thing," said Dobbs, reflectively. "If I can't sell it I cancel it; and if I cancel it I can't sell it."

The Chinese have no dime novels, no billiards or lager beer, and there is no place where a young man can pawn his sleeve-buttons to get money to take his girl to the opera.

A London missionary brought home a Hottentot, at considerable personal expense, and the fellow went and hired out to a circus the first week after his arrival.

A gentleman of Bourbon county, Ky., is handed out to fame for having worn the same dress coat for thirty-two years. He always wore it in the house, which accounts for his not wearing it out.

The San Francisco Real Estate Circular says: Only seven persons were driven to the refuge of suicide in January by the ear splitting notes of the calliope of the steamer S. M. Whipple, against ten in December. This falling off has rendered the captain quite melancholy. He promises to crack on more steam this month, and either give rejoicing coroners a dozen victims or burst a boiler.
