MARCH.

The Margaret Lee Ashley.
Snow lingers still in drift and glade,
But look you where the brook has made

A narrow runway through the ice;
See where the little meadow mice
Have ventured forth, and left a track
All zigzag, to the brook and back.

The wind is rude and buffets one;
But feel the fervor of the sun!
Look up and see how warm and blue
The sky is smiling down at you;
And how the sunlight pats the trees:
Wake up, old elms, and don your leaves!

Mark how the wind calls, "Follow, follow!"
I know that in some deep wood hollow
The shy arbutus hides her head;
I know that in some leaf-mold bed
Sleep trillium and anemone
And violets that are to be.

BEYOND THE DAWN.

By Frank Lillie Pollock.
I will take back the life I knew,
The old life that I knew of yore,
And seek beyond the sky-line blue
The old romance, the wonder-shore.

NOTES

Here is a tragedy from life that for dramatic appeal can hardly be surpassed by fiction. The bald fact is that after one unsuccessful attempt, Miss Nora May French killed herself last month at the home of George Sterling, the author of the poem, "The Windy of Wine," which has set the literary world talking. The story of the first attempt at suicide is this: Miss French was a beautiful and gifted young woman who had written both verse and prose of exceptional quality for the Saturday Evening Post and other magazines. Like all of her contemporaries, she frequently brooded over the mysteries of life and death. Her uncle, a Presbyterian minister, had often deplored suicide to her. He told her, if the thought of self-destruction ever entered her mind to sit, pistol in hand, in a shadowy path and to shoot when the edge of the soft gloom touched her. "By that time you will have repented," said her uncle. "You will not shoot." But the idea fascinated the girl. Her poetic temperament and high-strung nervous condition took possession of the contemplation of death. Monday she sat in the Sterling cottage and brooded over a verse in Hawthorne's "Shropshire Lad," in which a youth ends his life with a revolver. "Bravely done, my lad, bravely done," she wrote under the lines. Then, with Sterling's revolver hidden in her dress, she hurried out to a quiet spot on the edge of the pines, looking out on the verdant valley of Carmel Mission. Here, she reached the shadow cast by the tree, and when it touched the edge of her dress she pointed the pistol at her head and pulled the trigger. But her hand was not as steady as she thought, or as she hoped; the bullet passed by her head, clipping only one curl of her bright hair. Having been face to face with death, her mood changed. Returning to the cottage she told Mrs. Sterling what she had done, showed her the bullet-shorn curl, blessed her uncle for his advice and declared guiltily that she would live and work. The next night, however, Miss French took cyanide of potassium and ended her life.

Professor Albert Bushnell Hart's "National Ideals," the last volume of the Harper's co-operative history, "The American Nation," contains many pat and pointed sayings regarding modern politics. In speaking of what he calls "unofficial government," Professor Hart remarks: "Nobody ever stated the American principle of party organization better than Thaddeus Stevens, who, when told that the candidate for a particular office was a democrat, said: 'I want to know whether he is our d—rascal.'"

Not the least interesting part of Mr. Perry MacKay's latest work, the prose drama entitled "The Scarecrow," is the before in which he defines his indebtedness to Hawthorne's story "Feathertop."

John A. Wyeth, Jr., aged 13, son of Dr. John A. Wyeth, a noted surgeon, and grandson of the late Dr. Marion Sims of New York, has written an allegorical and symbolical play in blank verse, entitled "Weakness of Man."

Although Master John has developed a literary talent at an age when most lads are interested in tops and marbles, he is very much of a boy. He has won six silver cups in athletic competitions at a private school, is devoted to out-of-door gymnastic sports, and can fight well with his fists when occasion demands. In appearance he is slight but sturdy, keen, alert, and he is extremely modest.

The play will be produced by E. H. Sothorn, when he gives his benefit for the actor's fund at the Lyric. Mr. Sothorn regards the production of Master John as a remarkable feat, considering the age of the author.

tempted, and the originality of his idea and its treatment is likely to arouse discussion.

Mr. Oliver Lodge, artist and author of "The Substance of Faith," which the Harpers publish on this side of the water, presents the rather impressive aspect of a spiritualist who is at the same time a sportsman. Sir Oliver is a constant golfer, a member of the Button Coldfield and Pelkistown golf clubs, and in fact, has played the game for thirty years. At St. Andrews, where he learned the game under Professor Tait, the latter said to him one day, "You don't play golf with your muscles; you play with your morals."

"But I hope," said Sir Oliver, in telling the story, "no one will consider my morals as bad as my golf."

Russia, the relentless censor, keeps on surprising Americans, who, even while they are forewarned of her attitude, are never quite prepared for the significance of an incident like the following. Back to New York from the Russian frontier, stamped with the official displeasure of the censor, showing half a dozen registered postmarks, a dark seal of red wax with the imperial eagle, and bearing on its paper wrapper the clean-cut inscription "Rejected."

LEAVES FROM OLD ALBUMS.

MRS. PHOEBE JUDD KIMBALL, THIRTY-FIVE YEARS AGO.

This interesting picture of a well known Salt Lake lady shows her as she looked about 1873. Mrs. Kimball is the widow of the late Heber P. Kimball, the well known business man and contractor of pioneer days. Mrs. Kimball's maiden name was Judd, and she and her sister, Mrs. M. G. Clawson, were among the leading belles of the early days in Salt Lake. Mrs. Kimball is now living in California for her health.

fuse par la Censure Etrangere de Varsovie," comes "The Memoirs of a Russian Governor," to whose author, Prince Urussov himself, the book had been consigned. The volume was sent to the prince in complimentary courtesy by Mr. Herman Rosenthal, translator of the Russian original, and it was returned to him at the address annexed by the sender, the Astor library. There will perhaps be some free discussion of this incident in America. "Refused by the foreign censor at Warsaw," has said all that Russia has to say.

Mr. Will N. Harbin has a good story to tell, one with a moral which he says might read, "What's the use?" One of the ladies who are constrained to entertain their literary clubs with "afternoons with authors," wrote Mr. Harbin, asking him politely to furnish her with the story of his life. Being a busy man, Mr. Harbin sent a courteous letter of regret instead. Whereupon the lady wrote politely to ex-Gov. Northern of Virginia, because she had seen his name attached to a Harper record endorsing Mr. Harbin's latest novel, "Mam' Linda." Whereupon the ex-governor, being at least no less busy than Mr. Harbin, politely wrote to the mayor of Dalton, because Dalton was where Mr. Harbin was born. Whereupon the mayor, being also busy, politely wrote to Mr. Loveman of Dalton, because Mr. Loveman was a friend of Mr. Harbin. Whereupon Mr. Loveman politely wrote to Mr. Harbin. Problem: who is to blame, or did the lady get the biography?

Mrs. Humphrey Ward will sail from England to America on March 11 on board the Adriatic. She expects to remain as the guest of her cousin, Mrs. Frederick W. Whitridge, for about six weeks in New York. A large number of social arrangements have already been completed for her entertainment, and there is no end to these in sight. In spite of the conjectures as to the nature of her coming experience she will turn into material. It is probable that Mrs. Ward will give herself over to a single-minded enjoyment of first impressions, and let literary matters for a while at any rate, alone. "The Testing of Diana Malloy," in Harper's Magazine, promises to be a fertile topic of discussion during the sojourn of its author.

Frank Danby's new novel, "The Heart of a Child," bids fair to revive a controversy which raged vigorously a few years ago with regard to the morals of the women of the stage. In this case the controversy actually commenced before the book was written, for the author has recorded that it is the outcome of a discussion between her and her brother, the late Owen Hall, author of "Floradora" and other musical comedies. It was his intention to write together the life of a typical London "Gaiety Girl" who marries a poor and is taken up by smart society. Mr. Hall held that such a girl, even though she kept her head through her stage career, could inevitably succumb to the greater temptations of fashionable life. Mrs. Frankau, on the other hand, insisted that no general rule could be laid down; that here, as everywhere, individual character and temperament would tell. "The Heart of a Child" is the result of her conviction.

Messrs. Harper & Brothers have just announced a new series of "The Heart of a Child," which will include two novels—"Man and Wife" and "I Say No," by Wilkie Collins.

"The Liberator," is a strong, timely, fascinating, political story, by Isaac N. Stevens, and its dedication shows that it was written for a purpose, viz: To point out the obstacles to a successful public career for the honorably ambitious youth of America.

The mission of the book is to teach the young man the value of the precept and example making manifest

Intensity, is one of the most dramatic pieces of fiction that has appeared in recent literature. It is a book which should be read by every one directly interested in the great drama going on in the south in the present day, for its sane and even presentation of the two phases may help to soften the irritating spirit of prejudice on both sides. "The Stuff of a Man" for many reasons is bound to stand as one of the strongest books of the year.

MAGAZINES

Notable reproductions in the April Century are Frances Houston's portrait of Miss Ethel Barrymore, Henry Brown Fuller's beautiful "Triumph of Truth over Error," and Kenyon Cox's "Greek Science," the statue made by the painter-sculptor for the new building of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Science. More memories of our history, this time of his brief sojourn in the office of the United States coast survey, have been set down for readers of the Century by John Ross Key, grandson of Francis Scott Key. An early portrait of Key by Whistler, a crayon drawing, hitherto unpublished, accompany the recollections.

The popular author, C. A. Stephens has an interesting story in this week's issue of the Youth's Companion entitled "The Wheat Farm Farthest North." Very early in the story, the author, by Sir William Ramsey, K. C. B. F. R. S., entitled "How discoveries are made," which illustrates the methods of research, attention, study and patience by which those who have added to the world's store of exact knowledge have made their records. "Helping the Barton Girls," and "The Big Vaquero," are also interesting stories. The usual good reading in the departments.

A SOLEMN QUESTION.

Some go to church because they're made to.
And some go there because they're paid to.
Some go to flirt with frivolous girls,
And some to show their ribbons and curls.
Some go to show new bonnets and clothes,
And some to see their friends and beaux.
Some go to sing, some go to sleep,
Some go to gaze and some to weep.
But of all this mixed and thronging crowd,
Who join in the response long and loud:
How many of their number on a Sabbath
How many of their number on a Sabbath
Sabbath day,
Go there to hear, to heed, and pray?
