THE WATER BELOW.

There is a water source below as well as above upon the surface of the earth, and the question has been sprung whether in many instances the subterranean water is not the most certain, most abundant, and most easily available. San Francisco and other portions of California are contemplating some gigantic and very expensive schemes for furnishing water for domestic and agricultural uses, and a San Francisco paper suggests that the subterranean supply has been too much neglected and might frequently be made more cheaply and more satisfactorily available than the supply above ground, by means of artesian wells.

The outlay for large and long canals is very great, and they cost considerable annually to keep them in repair, when they have been successfully made. Here are some suggestions from the S. F. Chronicle.

"We are of opinion that a simpler and cheaper expedient should first be thoroughly tried. The parts of the State where irrigation is needed. From the geological and topographical character of the State, we are driven to the conclusion that there is plenty of water under our feet, which could be brought to the surface by artesian wells, of which a sufficient number might be sunk to irrigate all our valleys. The process would not be very expensive, and that is when compared with that of constructing canals—and would not require the creation of incorporated companies. The sinking of an artesian well would be a mere neighborhood undertaking, in which the farmers would be required to invest little else than their own labor.

"But is the water to be generally reached by this simple process? We know that it has succeeded in many localities, and that there have been few failures. In San Jose valley and the lower part of Los Angeles valley, as well as in San Bernardino, no artesian wells are very numerous and furnish abundance of water for all purposes. We know also that in many other localities plenty of water has been found, and that flowing wells have not been struck. So far as mere experiment has gone, therefore, everything indicates the probability of success.

But even experiments, valuable as they are in a practical question like this, are very far short of the favorable evidence furnished by the topographical features of the State.

It is then evident that an immeasurable amount of water finds its way below the surface of our valleys, beneath impervious strata, forming a network of living streams which have somewhere an outlet yet undiscovered by man. It is known that such streams exist in countries as distant as the mountains of Southern Algeria, in the edge of Sahara, artesian borings struck abundantly in fish of hitherto unknown varieties. From the mud volcanoes of Central America fish of several varieties have been often thrown out. Such facts are evidence that subterranean streams, perhaps equal to the greatest on the surface, flow in silence and darkness beneath the ribs of the solid earth. In our valleys the problem is to tap these streams, which every analogy in nature proves to exist.

"Suppose, then, there are so many objections to having the State extend its aid to canal projects, the Legislature were simply to offer a liberal bounty to the discoverer of artesian water in any valley where it had not hitherto been found?"

These observations would apply in part to Utah, where many canals have been dug, and where some expensive ones have not proved very successful.

It is true, attempts have been made to bore artesian wells in this vicinity, but the attempts have not been successful, nor have they been very thorough, and the widely prevalent belief that the sinking of such wells would not be successful in these valleys. That may be true, or it may not. But it would certainly be worth while to make a thorough experiment at some suitable point, and have the question settled one way or the other.

SPONTANEOUS COMBUSTION.—The Tuolumne, Cal., Independent presents a case of spontaneous combustion—

"Last Saturday, Judge Mackey, of Merced, discharged one of his hired men, who was a confirmed drunkard. The man, named in the Independent, until the following Monday, when he departed for La Grange, taking the precaution to take a gallon of gin along. Nothing was said of him after this until Wednesday, when two small boys, living just outside of La Grange, ran into their father's house in great alarm, saying there was a fire. Such proved to be the case. The unfortunate man, by his excess in drinking, had destroyed his vital energies, and chemical agents had obtained the ascendancy, so the hydrogen of alcoholic drinks had combined with the phosphorus of the body, forming phosphuretted hydrogen, which ignited spontaneously, and the wretched man died a most appalling death."

The Sacramento Record-Union says—

"The most eminent authorities are still in doubt as to whether what is called spontaneous combustion of the human body is possible, and it will not therefore dogmatize upon the modus operandi.

That there is plenty of evidence in behalf of the reality of the fact is, however, certain, and when so distinguished a chemist as Le Cat positively declares that he has satisfied himself, by personal examination in a case which occurred in his house, that he was lying, that spontaneous combustion does occur, it is not so easy to accept the equally positive denial of the opposition party even though so high an authority as Liebig be on that side of the opposition.

"Two of the best authenticated cases happen to be those of a young man and a young woman, neither of whom were intemperate, nor fat; and it will not therefore be surprising that the preliminary symptoms of disease, flame was communicated to their fingers and increased upon them, playing about one of the hands, and then to the clothes used to envelop them. Immersion in water did not readily extinguish the fire, and even after it was thus put out, the man would again break out spontaneously. The effect did not extend beyond the hands. The fire being extinguished, the burns were finally healed after the loss of the epidermis and many of the nails."

While we have never witnessed anything like spontaneous combustion of human kind, we may confess that we have seen a few persons who would receive a portion of their deaths if they were to expire that way.

HEAVY LAW FOR BURGLARS.—The New York Sun justly advocates severe punishments for all burglars found armed with deadly weapons—

"The shooting of Mr. Shute of Brooklyn in his own house in the night by an armed burglar, has had invaded his premises for the purpose of robbing, or for another argument for the enactment of a law providing that all criminals who may be arrested in the act of burglary, or attempted burglary, or having deadly weapons upon their persons, shall be imprisoned for a term of fifteen or twenty years.

When a criminal is armed with a pistol or other deadly weapon, and is in the act of committing a burglary, or is in the possession of a pistol or other deadly weapon, it is necessary to kill in order to escape. It is to be expected, therefore, that such a law should be enacted accordingly. The strict enforcement of such a law as we have suggested would have a salutary effect."

One of the riders killed by Neely's men had on McManis's clothes; this fact will be established by affidavits. The result of Neely's fight was thirteen men killed and one wounded; McManis's company is encamped near a point where the railroad crosses between the Palm Springs and the lower valley, and the men were very mad at the defeat of the raiders by McManis, and over they will have three for one. Some of the captured cattle belong to men living more than 200 miles from the Rio Grande. The stock in western Texas is very scarce, and the men are in a desperate condition, and the herdsmen fearing the Mexican raiders.

THE AGREEMENT.—It is understood that the agreement between the Pennsylvania Railway and the B. & O. Railway is for a period of ten years. The companies are to agree upon monthly rates between the existing points, and the rates to be maintained by both. The contract can only be terminated by a resolution of the respective boards.
