At the examination of Vincenzo Matto, on a charge of keeping children in servitude in violation of the civil rights law, the boy Joseph told his story. He said he did not know his surname. Three years ago, being then but eight years old, he met Matto in the village Calleberell, in southern Italy, where he resided. Matto induced him to go with him for a night, promising him to bring him home the next day, but instead took him to Naples and put him on board a vessel with a number of other boys. All arrived in this city and were taken to No. 45 Crosby street. Joseph was kept locked up for one day and on the next was sent out with the others to play the violin. He was ordered to bring home fifty-five cents per day, and a couple of months afterwards a dollar a day. When he failed to bring that amount he was beaten by Matto with a stick and tied up in a cellar. On one occasion Matto bit his ear, which still retains the mark of his teeth, and only fed him on bread and cheese. About a month ago he ran away and had to sleep in the street cars and Central Park, where he was found. He positively identified Matto as the man who kidnapped him, kept him in Crosby street, and abused him. A boy aged eleven testified to even greater cruelties perpetrated on him by Matto, than those related by Joseph. A child aged seven shrank away with terror when asked to place his hand on Matto if it was with him he had lived, and was only prevailed upon to do so when accompanied by an officer. The examination adjourned over to Saturday.

The Charleston News commenting on Jeff. Davis' speech at White Sulphur Springs, says—

"No one who reads the speeches which made Mr. Davis delivers wherever he has the opportunity will be at a loss to account for his electioneering tour during the war. The lack of foresight and obscurity in questions which perhaps such utterances as those which Davis before the Southern Historical Convention caused the grievous blunders which hastened the fall of the confederacy. Mr. Davis has learned nothing and promoted nothing. It has been his habit to thing and speak of him with kindness and affection as a showman, sincere, well-meaning man, but of fatuous head and heart. But it must say plainly that he is one of the most troublesome elements that we have to deal with in its efforts to bridge the chasm of war and secure opinion and peace. For whatever Mr. Davis says the southern people are held responsible. His rash words are laid at our door and it is useless to deny or explain. The same will be the case with what publishes of this speech and it will be the same with the speech just made. The southern people have heard Mr. Davis gladly, but he owed it to the south to hold his tongue, as the best service he can render to his people."

"Later particulars of the hanging of Keller near Les Cygnes, Kansas, yesterday. The mob organized at Twin Springs early yesterday morning and proceeded to Les Cygnes, where Keller was in jail. The sheriff hearing of their intention, took Keller to the woods near by and hid him. On arriving at Les Cygnes the mob took the sheriff in charge and by intimidation made him tell Keller's whereabouts, when they proceeded to the spot and took him. He was taken back to Les Cygnes and allowed to make his will. He was then taken to a wood at five o'clock and hanged. On arriving at the scene of execution, Gen. C. M. Blair, who had just arrived in town for the purpose of holding court, was introduced to the crowd. He addressed the mob, urging them to let the law take its course, and was followed by others, but all to no avail. The disposition of the prisoner was left to twelve men, who had charge of him. They took a vote by ballot as to the disposition to be made by them, 11 were for execution and the other declined to vote either way. This settled the question and arrangements for the execution were quickly made. Keller was asked to make any statement or confession he might wish, but declined to say anything further than to deny any knowledge of the crime. He was then pinioned, blindfolded and placed on the wagon and again asked if he had anything to say. He only said "No." Then the wagon containing Keller, Rev. Mr. Bland and family Keller murdered. The wagon suddenly started and Keller swung off into eternity.
