WASHINGTON, 18.—The Honse proceeded to the discussion of Knott's report on the privileges and duties of the Houses in the electoral count, deciding to do so instead of considering the compromise committee's report, which the republicans urged. The vote stood—141 to 81.

Knott declared that any attempt to interfere with the constitutional right of the House in this would be treason. He argued that the Presi-dent of the Senate had no more right than the sergeant-at-arms to count as well as open the certifi-cates, and that the 22nd Joint Rule. cates, and that the 22nd Joint Rule, which the republicans had stood by for twelve years, was still valid and constitutional. He intimated, sarcastically, that the President's construction of his constitutional duty in the premises was to strip the froatier and crowd the capital with troops, and believing that this house had a high power and solemn duty to perform in counting the electoral vote, he considered any attempt by anybody to coerce it to count what it believed was an invalid or void vote, or to coerce it.

Hesolved, That it is the power of duty of the House, conjointly and duty of the House, conjointly with the Senate, to provide by law or other constitutional method, a mode for fairly and truly ascartaining and properly counting the electoral vote of each State, so as to give effect to the choice of each State in the election of President.

CHICAGO, 18.—The following is an extract of Col. Miles' official report of the recent battle with Sit-ting Bull's band: Sitting Bull's band was again defeated near the head of Redwater on December 18, by three companies of the Fifth Infantry, under command of Lieut. Baldwin. The Indian trail was obscured by a severe snowstorm when north of the Missonri, and as the reports were conflicting, I divided my forces, taking three companies through the Musselshell and Dry Fork country, and sending three down the north side of the Missouri, four companies under Captain Snyder being then on Dry Fork. Siiting Bull had crossed near Wolf Point, but on the approach of Baldwin's force retreated back again at the head of his camp of 122 lodges. He was driven south of the Yellowstone and his camp captured, with many lodges standing together, with sixty horses, mules and ponies, and everything pertaining to an Indian village was legislative provision on the subject, or authoritative direction from the Senate and House of Representatives, the president of the Senate, upon opening the certificates, declares and counts the electoral votes for President and Vice President.

Burchard addressed the House in favor of the minority report. The majority report involved the great constitutional question, whether the Government had the right to review the proceedings of the state officers in the election or appointment of electors. If that were so, then either house might examine, collaterally, whether officers of a State have taken the oath to support the Constitution. He denied such right. The acts of the duly constituted State authorities, when verified, as the law required, must be taken as legal and correct. He instanced the fact that Adams and Jefferman, when President of the Senate had opened and counted the electoral votes. He was pleased that a better feeling prevailed as to
